THE ELECTION IN THE CITY.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD WARDS.

In this section of the City, yesterday, there were no unusual occurrences. The routine of election day was strictly adhered to. No disturbances of any moment occurred.

THE FOURTH WARD.

In the Fourth Ward the fact that an election was proceeding was not apparent, except in the immediate vicinity of the polls; and even there the usual crowd of men anxious to part with the tickets of their friends was not seen. Very few arrests were made, and those were for comparatively trivial offenses. Soon after half-past 4 o'clock the polling places were deserted, and the Inspectors and Canvassers were left to do their work in peace. In so far as the effect of the Registry Law was apparent, it was not in favor of the Republicans and Americans, for nearly all of those who presented themselves at the polls, without having previously attended to the registry of their names, were of either the one of the other of those parties. During the evening there were a number of bonfires in the streets, but they were not fed with tar, and were only surrounded by boys, most of whom looked on quietly, while the others ran in and out of alley-ways, in search of empty barrels with which to keep up the illumination. Although the liquor stores were very generally open, there were very few drunken men in the streets.

THE FIFTH WARD.

In the Fifth Ward there was in reality less excitement than on ordinary days. There were no fights, no crowds upon the principal street-corners, and very little wrangling at the polls.

THE SIXTH WARD.

The Sixth Ward maintained the reputation for quietude on election days which it sought to establish last year. There was not a single disturbance of any consequence during the entire day. The younger portion of the Police, who had anticipated an opportunity for gaining some credit for vigilance and courage, were disgusted. The Ward had been, they said, as quiet and orderly as a religious congregation. They were prepared for work, but there was no work to do, other than to wait and watch—and they did it. At the corner of Elm and Franklin streets, in the Sixth Ward, a fine little bright-eyed boy, richly dressed in black velvet and lace, stood on active duty, with his fingers full of Democratic tickets and his little silver treble calling on all who passed by to "Vote for the Dem'ic candies." This young gentleman was about three years and six or eight months old, and his name, as we heard, was James M. S Brennan, eldest son of the Judge of the same name. Verily, train up a child in the way he should go—and in his manhood he will be a faithful advocate of "regular nominations." As it had been during the day, so was it during the evening. When the polls closed, the few who had been loitering in the vicinity went away. The boys, of course, secured all the empty barrels that incautious grocers had left where they could be stolen, and made bonfires of them. But even the bonfires failed to attract a crowd, with the exception of one in Pearl-street, where the boys had secured a cask which was partly filled with whisky, from an adjacent store. The head was knocked in, and the barrel, with its contents, thrown upon the fire. The whisky became excited, took fire and ran down the street in a bright blue blaze, flowing onward to the sewer. For a short time the people in the neighborhood were very much frightened, fearing, as they said, that the gases in the sewer would become ignited, explode and blow up the entire Sixth Ward. But the liquor-dealer from whom the barrel and contents had been stolen, looked on calmly. He knew the quality of the article and felt that there was no danger. And he was right, for before the flowing liquid reached the sewer, the whisky had burned out, and nothing remained to enter it but the water with which the rascal had diluted it. When the bright blue blaze had died out, the people returned to the fire, and many of them expressed the opinion that it would be a good thing if all the whisky in the Ward were put to the same use. This was all the excitement the Sixth-Ward people had on election day.

SEVENTH WARD.

The voting was conducted quietly, and, but for the flaming posters, the ticket booths, and the groups of idlers that might be seen surrounding the doors of the liquor stores nearest to the polling places, one would have found it difficult to believe that an election was in progress at all. No black eyes, no bloody noses, no cracked heads, no brawling inebriate. But three arrests were made. Thomas J. Mahoney was taken up for illegal voting, and quietly conveyed to the Station-house, where he still remains. Charles F. Reid, an infatuated mariner, was arrested for a similar offence, and a certain Ned Mulligan, who attempted to swear him through, was made the partner of his fate.

EIGHTH WARD.

The voting was brisk in this Ward throughout the day, the Americans for a time doing well. The Republicans polled a good vote, and seemed satisfied with what they were doing. The Ward, however, has gone Democratic by a large majority. As in the other Wards, everything was perfectly quiet, although most of the liquor-stores were open, and were freely patronized.

NINTH WARD.

The vote here was lighter than usual, and but little interest was manifested. There was no crowd about the booths or the polling-places. A Tammany man got into a quarrel with a disciple of Mozart, and a few blows were exchanged. This was all the disturbance heard of.

TENTH WARD.

On election day the Tenth has hitherto earned a reputation not absolutely free from stain. The "boys" were wont to be around, and now and then a row was part of the programme. Yesterday it was a paragon of popular decency. Throughout the whole District there were but two arrests, and these for offences by no means aggravated—one for disorderly conduct, the other for drunkenness. At sundown, the porter-houses, which had obeyed with commendable fidelity the restriction against liquor-selling, exhibited extraordinary promptitude in taking down their shutters and throwing their doors wide open. The anxious outsiders were not slow to avail themselves of their old privilege of taking a drink, but, so far as could be observed, none seemed disposed to disturb the peace of the people.

ELEVENTH WARD.

No arrests of any consequence were made in this Ward during the day.

TWELFTH WARD.

In the Twelfth Ward, the principal excitemen centered upon the three candidates for Assembly The voting was chiefly done in the early part of the day, a large proportion of the votes being cast before 2 o'clock. The liquor-stores and bars were generally closed, and, with one or two exceptions, no wrangling or disturbance occurred at any of the voting places. At the Third District, corner of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street and Third-avenue, Pat Naughton was arrested for offering to fight. In the Fourth District there was a slight dispute between rival candidates, but it was stopped before the parties came to blows. In fact, the only excitement during the day was the running away of a span of horses attached to an ice-cart. One of the horses was killed.

THIRTEENTH WARD.

This Ward, like all the rest, was as quiet as "the snow-flake falling on the sod." People seemed as devoted to their ordinary avocations, as quiet, well-behaved, (better behaved, in fact,) as though no such thing as an election was to be thought of. During the entire day there was but one arrest—that of one James McCann, who permitted his enthusiasm to get the better of his judgment, and became, in consequence, somewhat disorderly. He was brought before the District Court and held in bail to the amoun of $300 to keep the peace. After nightfall some of the remoter streets were lighted up by flaming barrels, (probably the imperfect substitutes for booths which the American Party had employed during the day,) and round these flitted groups of mischievous imps, who were guilty of nothing worse than making night and the neighborhood hideous with their yells.

FOURTEENTH WARD.

Beyond the upsetting of a ticket booth in the Sixth District, the election passed off in this Ward with entire tranquility. The liquor stores were nearly all open and did a good trade. The contest was mainly between Tammany and Mozart Halls, the Republican and American tickets meeting with comparatively little support. Murphy was far in the ascendant from an early hour, in fact from the opening of the polls.

FIFTEENTH WARD.

The voting in this Ward was brisk for some time after the opening of the polls, but slackened off towards noon. A lighter vote was cast than on previous elections, and it was evident early in the day that the Democrats were in the majority, as has proved to be the case. This has always been the "Banner Ward" of the Republicans in this City, and it will surprise many to learn that it has gone over to the Democracy. There was not the least disturbance throughout the day.

SIXTEENTH WARD.

It is seldom that there are any flagrant disorders to record on election day in the Sixteenth Ward, and yesterday the voting at its polling places was done so quietly that, but for the little knots of men which gathered about the big posters bearing the names of the candidates, that were displayed here and there, a stranger passing by would scarcely have imagined that the citizens were exercising their right of suffrage. No disturbnnce was expected in this part of the City, and there was no addition to the regular Police force of the Precinct. At the polling place corner of Seventh-avenue and Twentieth-street, the pocket of Peter Halpin was picked, and the thieves attempted to run off with his gold watch and chain, valued at $110. Officers Patterson and Tuomey arrested David Gillis and Thomas Morgan, the supposed culprits, and both were held to answer. The watch was found on the person of Morgan, but the chain was not recovered. The liquor-shops were very generally closed in this Ward, from sunrise to sunset, in accordance with the law.

SEVENTEENTH WARD.

Mackerelville was never more quiet on election day than it was yesterday. The vote was light, as i usually the case when Charter officers are not to be chosen, and the Registry law tended greatly to keep th polls clear. Late in the in the afternoon, two young men were arrested for fighting at the Thirteenth street poll, and a third was detained for attempting to rescue the prisoners.

EIGHTEENTH WARD.

Capt. Bennett, of the Eighteenth Ward, reports that his Precinct was perfectly quiet during the day. There was but one arrest made, and that was for drunkenness.

NINETEENTH WARD.

In the Nineteenth Ward the voting proceeded without interruption, and there was no disturbance or arrest. The police, who were all on special duty, remarked that it was the most quiet day which had been experienced for a long time. At one or two precincts on the Third-avenue, a few individuals became excited from a too free use of liquor, but all symptoms of disorder were promptly suppressed.

TWENTIETH WARD.

In the Twentieth Ward there was one arrest for disorderly conduct at the polls. About sunset a few rowdies in the First District attempted to carry off the ballot-boxes from the polling-place No. 206 West Twenty-seventh-street, but the Police speedily vanquished them, and arrested Wm. Cummings for alleged assault upon one of the officers with intent to kill. A double-barreled pistol, loaded to the muzzle, was taken from the prisoner. Another named Andrew Burke, was placed in durance for attempting to swear in the vote of a person who was not entitled to cast it.

TWENTY-FIRST WARD.

In the Twenty-first Ward the vote was light, and there was little interest manifested in the election. There were no arrests, and no attempts at fraudulent voting were detected.

TWENTY-SECOND WARD.

The Twenty-second Ward was the scene of no excitement whatever. The drinking places were all closed, and the Police made not a single arrest.

THE NEWS AT HEAD-QUARTERS.

TAMMANY WIGWAM.

In accordance with a time-honored custom, the great unterrified assembled last night in Tammany Hall, to rejoice over the returns, to exchange congratulations and, in appropriate phraseology, "to have a good time generally." There were but few of the more prominent members of the party present, and of these but few deemed it expedient to take a prominent part in the proceedings. In fact, with the exception of Daniel B. Taylor and Capt. Rynders, no well-known leader was to be seen.

Mr. Taylor was elected Chairman by acclammation. He expressed in the usual terms his sense of the honor thus conferred on him, and indulged in the flattering hope that every Democratic candidate would be returned.

Capt. Rynders was called for, and made a characteristic speech.

Mr. James Nesbitt followed, and was warmly applauded. He said that on former occasions of this kind Tammany Hall was in mourning, but he was rejoiced in the conviction that to-night it was thronged with those who had met to greet one another on the event of a tremendous Democratic victory. [More cheers.]

Capt. Rynders made another speech. He accounted for the falling off in the State as compared with the County ticket, by saying that in the election for County officers, as heads of departments, all who were dependent on those departments, as well as all those who speculated upon the City Treasury, were brought out, en masse, to vote for their respective candidates, whilst the honest men were forced to come out and vote on the opposite side, and thus the vote in the City was immensely augmented. He asked all who concurred in this view of the case to vote aye. There was a vehement affirmative response.

A gentleman whose aspect betokened a degree of excitement that was not entirely attributable to normal causes, here rushed forward with a slip of paper, which he handed to the Chairman. It was a report from the First Ward.

Chairman—The First Ward has given for the Democracy the small vote of 1,435; for the Black Republicans, 245; and for the Americans, 104. [Hear hear, hear.] This makes a Democratic majority of over 1,000. Now, gentlemen, I have to say that the returns up to this time indicate that in this City, so far, the Democratic majority cannot be far short of 10,000—[Hear, hear]—and that when the returns from the whole 22 Wards come in it will not be less than 20,000. [Cheers.]

Gentleman in the crowd—How is—how is—how is—how is—[Great laughter]—how is Mr. Murphy in the First Ward?

A Voice—He has gone down to take a drink.

Chairman—He is ahead by four or five thousand. [Cheers.]

A Voice—How is the Assembly?

Chairman—We have no reports.

Capt. Rynders—By the last accounts, Porgy Joe was ahead. [Cheers and laughter.]

More returns were brought in, and more cheers were given.

Mr. Nesbitt—Gentlemen, with your permission I move, and I hope it will be sanctioned unanimously, that we take a recess for five minutes so as to take a drink with the Chairman. [Uproarious applause, intermingled with cries for a song.]

Capt. Rynders—Was that motion seconded by Hon. Mr. Fitzgibbon, of the Second Ward.

Mr. Nesbitt—I think you should have seconded that yourself. [Laughter.]

The Chairman announced additional Democratic majorities from the Fifth and Tenth Wards, which were received enthusiastically.

Mr. Nesbitt was again called upon for a song.

Capt. Rynders—Nesbitt says he has been up the last three nights, distributing tickets, and drinking lager-bier and Irish whisky, and he don't feel disposed to sing. [Cries of "A song—a song."]

Mr. Nesbitt.—I will sing on but one condition, and that is that you all join in the chorus. [Cries of "Go ahead."]

Mr. Nesbitt, (singing)—

Oh, it was from Ould Ireland I came here,
To spend my days in happy cheer,
And likewise to drink small beer,
With the boys upon the Railroad.

Mr. Nesbitt—Chorus, boys,

For I was always willing,
Oh, while Paddy was on the Railroad.

Here the bard was suddenly interrupted. Some laughed, some cheered, some hooted. Rynders in vain remonstrated. The Chairman was dumb. One young gentleman, who exhibited all the traits of well-developed rowdyism, made himself particularly obnoxious. To him the melodious Nesbitt addresses himself thus:

Nesbitt—I see a chap there with a glazed cap—he had better shut up now! [Confusion.] I see that fellow putting his tongue out this way—(stretching his hand from beside his mouth, and waving his fingers up and down.) I won't stand it. [Increased confusion.]

Mr. Nesbitt seizes the fluid lamp that stands before the President, hurls it with terrific force at the head of the indecorous youngster, leaps off the platform, clears a way for himself, and at once resorts to violence. There is a concentrated rush on the combatants, blows are freely interchanged, and, the friends of the accomplished songster being in the ascendant, there is an immediate rush down stairs, which half depletes the hall. Nesbitt induces his outer garment, which he had abandoned in the fray, doffs a hat twice the size of his head, and presents to Capt. Rynders as one of the spoila opima, the victor's spoils, the cap of the ejected enemy. At the same time he observes that he begs to present one of the most unsatisfactory returns of the night—the accuracy of which he could vouch for, as he had received it at first hand—viz: a black eye, which was an obvious fact.

Scene No. 2.—Col. McCunn presents certain Democratic returns from the Tenth Ward, which the Chairman indorses, but which Mr. Thomas J. Munday declares to be an infernal lie. [Personal altercation between Mr. Munday and Col. McCunn, at the close of which the former retires precipitately.]

Scene No. 3.—Grand tableau. The meeting adjourned. Bar-room thronged. Large crowd outside. One gentleman snatches his neighbor's watch and rushes down Chatham-street. A corps of voluntary police start in pursuit. Curtain falls.

MOZART HALL.

Whether from presentiments of defeat, a distaste for the evanescent pleasures of listening to bogus returns, or a lack of interest in the election, the head-quarters of the Mozart Hall Democracy looked ominously black last evening. There were various explanations of this phenomenon: some said the Tammany and Anti-Tammany tickets were too near alike to create any spirited opposition among the Democracy; others averred that Mr. Wood's friends were husbanding their resources for the charter election. It was evident, however, that this portion of Mr. Buchanan's followers were content to rely upon the newspapers, and were not in so great a hurry but that they could let the election take care of itself until morning.

THE REPUBLICAN CAMP.

The Republicans gathered in large numbers at their Head-quarters, No. 618 Broadway, last evening but the assemblage was a very quiet one. The reading of the returns from the different Wards, as from time to time they were brought in, was listened to, for the most part in silence, and there was no exchange of congratulations upon the result. A shifting crowd poured in and out during the whole evening, and in it occasionally were politicians of other than the Republican party, anxious to learn the news, and how it was received there. During the evening speeches were made by Mr. John Fitch, who was in the Chair, Mr. S. B. Dutcher, and Hon. Benj. F. Manierre, the Senator elect from the Sixth District.

Mr. Fitch said that the Registry Law, with all its imperfections, had so far worked well; that the squad of rowdies who made it a rule to "vote early and vote often," had been prevented from casting so many ballots apiece on this day as they had been accustomed to deposit. The attacks upon Mr. Seward during the campaign had redounded to the advantage of the Republican Party, and had brought many Irish voters to his standard who had before opposed the party. The Republican vote in most of the Wards at the present election had been as large as that cast for Gov. Morgan; in the lower Wards it was smaller now than formerly, because many people had moved up town.

Mr. Dutcher, rising in response to a call, said t at when the canvass was going on, he had felt as if he could speak whenever his voice was called for in behalf of Republican principles; but now that the battle was over he felt more like resting. To the news of Republican victories in other States, he felt assured, would be added that of a Republican victory in New-York. He believed that they had beaten the self-styled Democracy, and the self-styled Americans, and that the latter would desert their leaders, who were the most corrupt leaders of any party, and their leaders would go into retirement. [Hisses and Applause.] He believed that the present contest would lead on to a victory next year that would place W. H. Seward, the noblest son of the Empire State in the Presidential chair.

Mr. Manierre said he had been elected to represent the Sixth Senatorial District of New-York State solely on the Republican nomination, without the indorsement of the Americans. On taking his seat in the Senate he would endeavor to pursue such a course as would meet with the approbation of his const

A WEEK WITH THE JURY.

A Graphic Narrative by one of the Twelve.

It was towards the close of a lovely day, in one of the early Summer months; the declining sun was pouring a flood of golden radiance—however, as you may have heard something very much like this before, and as the state of the weather has nothing, whatever, to do with the matter in hand, I will proceed in a more direct and less hackneyed style. It was half-past seven o'clock: the tinkling of a bell vibrated upon the air—I fondly imagined that it was my time-piece chiming forth the hour—a servant, entering the room, announced the presence of an unknown person, whom for safety's sake, he had left inclosed between the two doors communicating with the street. Lucius asserted that he had never seen the visitor before; that he had a paper in his hand, and that he desired a personal interview. Under ordinary circumstances I should have supposed that the paper was a bill, and the visitor a dun, but it so happened that I was free from apprehension on that score. (Poor credit with tradespeople. Cash on delivery.) A vague suspicion seized upon my mind. Could the visitor be an emissary from the Courts, and the paper a subpœna. I have all my life had a horror of being called upon to testify. I have always associated the witness-box with the pillory, and I dread cross-examination as I do auto-da-fé or castor oil. I well knew that my tergiversations and contradictions would richly entitle me to the derision of the public, if not to impeachment by the prosecution. Still, I met the stranger face to face. Deputy-Sheriff was written in his every lineament, besides being graven on his shield. He spoke:

"Algernon Brownstone?"

"Yes, sir." I was astonished at the firmness of my voice. He poked his paper endwise at me, and making sure that I had taken it, and that the document was, technically, served, he uttered one word and disappeared. This was the word—JURY. And he proceeded on his ruthless errand, carrying dismay with him as he went, and leaving despair on every threshhold that he crossed.

I retired to my room and perused the dreadful summons. It was brief and to the point, and was signed John Kelly. I was required—under penalty of death, I thought in my alarm—to attend as a juror at the new Court-house, new City Hall, at an appointed day and hour, to sit in judgment upon the lives or fortunes—I did not then know which—of my fellow-creatures. I was led to believe, however, from the fact that it was at the Marine Court I was to serve, that I might have jurisdiction of both classes of cases. The Marine Court, I argued, doubtless tries all charges of mutiny upon the high seas. To it sailors maltreated by their officers must naturally apply for redress; and perhaps, too, slavers apprehended in the waters of New-York are brought before this grim tribunal. And, of course, I thought that all lesser incidents connected with going down to the sea in ships, such as loss of baggage, fights with hackmen and disputes with runners, would also come hither for adjustment. I resolved to administer the law with strict impartiality, and rigidly to consider every one guilty till he was clearly proved innocent. The further to fit myself for my arduous duties, I read Abbot on Shipbuilding and Midshipman Easy, and went to see the patent steering-gear then exhibiting at the Merchants' Exchange.

Of course I told my friends and acquaintances of the mishap which had befallen me. The conversation which ensued was usually, with some little variations, the following:

"You won't go, I suppose?"

"Well, I had intended to go; I don't see, indeed, how I can escape. The summons is formal."

"Yes, but no one ever takes any notice of jury summonses."

"But the fine for non-attendance is ten dollars a day, and as my term of service may be a week or a fortnight. I should incur quite an onerous debt."

"P'shaw, I never heard of such a fine being collected in my life."

"But, suppose that all were to reason and act upon this principle, what would become of the administration of justice?"

"Oh, they can always find small people enough—foreigners, loafers and fellows whose time is worth nothing to themselves, and who can afford to give it gratuitously to the State."

"I don't know that your system is calculated to improve the cause of justice, exactly. How can you expect an intelligent verdict from an ignorant jury?"

"Oh, I don't know; but it's too bad to expect decent people to give their time and attention to things which call them away from their business, and won't profit them a red cent. If I were you I'd let the whole thing slide."

So far from being dissuaded by these and similar arguments from my original determination to obey the requisition, I was all the more resolved. I had in a manner recovered from my alarm, and felt desirous, nay anxious, that the hour, so big with fate, should summon us to Court. Before the day arrived, however, I learned that the Marine Court, so called because it deals exclusively with landsmen and has little or no connection with salt-water concerns, tries civil suits only, and of these none but such as involve a sum less than five hundred dollars. It was therefore cash, not crime, which was to form the subject of my deliberations.

The sun rose and the clock struck. We were huddled together in the narrow limits assigned to the "Marine Court, Special Term." A railing cut the room in halves. In one division was the throne of justice, flanked on one side by twelve chairs for the Jury, and on the other by the desk of the Clerk. In front was a table for the opposing counsel and their clients. The segment of the room, without the railing, was provided with benches, and upon these benches sat the public, or at least such portions of that gentle body as were unable to gain access to the throne-room. The Cerberus on duty, I noticed, admitted every one who was respectably dressed, and who had a roll of papers in his hand.

The Court was opened upon the arrival of Judge Toodle—Thompson, I should say. I always confused these two names. The crowd took off their hats, and the doormen, gate-keepers, and clerks, quenched their panatillas. Judge T. (in this way I can't go wrong) took his seat and a glass of ice-water. "Are there any motions before the Court?" he asked. Thirty-nine lawyers, from the adolescent graduate with his first case to the iron-gray veteran with 300 in his satchel, and room for more, arose simultaneously, and proceeded to make 39 motions. These motions were usually accompanied by gestures. Their purport was, that they were not prepared to go to trial. Their witnesses were sick, absent, drunk, or refractory. In short, out of 201 cases upon the calendar, only three could, by any possibility, be tried, and the counsel even in these would have preferred a postponement. The case of Black vs. White was, however, peremptorily called on, and the fiat went forth from the Judge to the Clerk, to "impanel a jury." I felt a little fluttering about the diaphragm, but managed to preserve such an air of defiance that the man at the gate took me for the counsel for the defence.

The clerk then proceeded to read a list of one hundred names belonging to individuals who had been, like me, personally served with summonses by the Sheriff's deputies. Twenty-nine answered to the call. Seventy-one preferred to run their chance, whether of fine, judicial displeasure, outlawry, or loss of civil rights. The rebuke would be administered, said the Clerk, in the form of a mulct of twenty-five dollars, and he re-read the list of those who had incurred it. Among them was my uncle, Alonzo Brownstone. I asked him three months afterwards if the fine had been collected, and he replied that it had not. He seemed hurt by the question, and appeared to think that performing jury duty was the exclusive lot of the unwashed. I felt convinced that I had seriously offended him, upon his saying, a few moments afterwards, "By George, Algernon, why don't you ask me if I have been to State Prison?"

Twenty-nine jurors had thus presented themselves for duty. I naturally imagined that we should at once proceed to the business of the day. I was mistaken. The Clerk announced that the jurymen who had excuses to offer might present them now. Twenty-eight of the twenty-nine rose hastily to their feet, and pressed madly towards the Judge. The officers of the Court formed them into a line, and admitted them one by one to the judicial presence. I began to feel very uneasy at my isolation. To be the only man who has neither the wit to imagine an excuse, nor the audacity to forge one, is not a pleasant position. I thought the Deputy Sheriff looked at me in speechless derision. The counsel in the first case glanced at me, and whispered. I resolved to join the line and offer an excuse too. I listened to the conversation between the Judge and the postulants for release, in order to learn what pretext I might most successfully urge. From time to time I heard such gems of forensic wisdom as these drop from the lips of his Honor: "Oh, if you are deaf, of course." "You don't look sick, Sir; I think we'll try you a day or two; if you get worse, we'll discharge you." "Exempt Fireman! Let me see your certificate. You can go, Sir." "The law does not allow me to accept business excuses in any case whatever." "Your wife is expecting confinement every moment, you say. How long have you been married?" "About seven months, your Honor." "I cannot excuse you, Sir." "Captain of a Target Company? Ridiculous! Take your seats over there."

I now abandoned my idea of attempting to escape. I had never been better in my life. I was neither deaf, nor mute, nor halt, nor blind. I had not married a wife, nor purchased five yoke of oxen. I had it is true, prepared three excuses, but feared the Judge might deem them insufficient. First, that I belonged to the un-uniformed militia, and commuted for the sum of 75 cents a year. Second, that when a boy at school, I had been put lieutenant in the Independent Blues. And third, that I once knew a man who had been umpire in a cock-fight. These quaint devices I severally relinquished, and relapsing into indifference, sat down with the prematu e parent and the Cap'n of the Rattletrap Musketeers.

Of the 28 who sought their discharge, 15 obtained it; 13 only were retained, so that in all we numbered 14 citizens, good and true, prepared to dispense justice and pocket the fee. The first case was again called on; Black and White, with their attendant counsel, took seats at the table prepared for them, and the clerk put our 14 names into a wheel. I was somewhat shocked to notice that we were drawn for like prizes in a lottery, and that the gentleman who came out first was our foreman, ex officio. He was bartender in a corner grocery, and spoke English with difficulty. Twelve of us were speedily enrolled, and the two exempts were discharged for an hour. Then we were sworn; then somebody rapped on a table; then a woman with an unruly baby was hustled out of court; then a shabby-genteel man, attorney for plaintiff, and Black's especial instigator, arose and pronounced the following exordium: "May it please the Court and Gentlemen of the Jury."

The case seemed a very clear one. White owed Black money, and refused to pay. White had even persecuted Black, and had earnestly invited him to go to law, or to the devil. White appeared to me to be a bad man, and an unworthy citizen. I was not alone in my opinion. My neighbors coincided with me, and thought very ill of White. The jury was unanimous for Black, unless I except the Dutch foreman, who whispered that he was for Black. The evidence was nearly exhausted, and we were still warm for Black, when the judge stopped the witness and said: "The case is perfectly clear; I shall direct the jury to, bring in a verdict for White. Pay the jury."

We were, of course, amazed at this unexpected dénouement. But it seems that we were mistaken in our mission. We had nothing to do with questions of law, and had jurisdiction merely in questions of fact. Now, in the case of Black versus White, there had been no discrepancies to reconcile; the evidence had all tended one way; White was clearly proved a slippery and unsafe man. There being here no question of fact, of course the law was on the side of the wrong man; and as Black was an honest man, and as White was not, White naturally won the case. And this, too, by mere force of law,—by sheer dint, so to speak, of statute. For the Jury was against him; his own lawyer had no confidence in him; the unwashed public were ashamed of him; the Judge himself looked at him askance; but, though he had swindled Black in the face of the world, he had committed no offence in the eye of the law. The whole case furnishes an admirable illustration of the danger which would result to society, were juries allowed jurisdiction in causes involving questions of law. Justice might sometimes be done, but then the law would be done as well. Now and then somebody might get his rights, but then it would be illegal and contrary to precedent. And, of course, nothing could be so deplorable as the redressing of an injury by a court in this century, when, by referring to Littlepop's Rejoinders, 2, ◊ 113, we find mention of a similar case, wherein a court of the last century redressed it the other way.

The clerk had, in the meantime, indemnified us for our time and our labor. We each of us received twelve cents, in current coin of the realm. In the Marine Court, when a litigant is condemned to pay the costs, one dollar and a half of the sum is for the jury.

The case of Brown vs. Green was now ready for a hearing. The counsel, however, being sufficiently bright to know beforehand that it involved no question of fact, announced that they would dispense with a jury, and leave the decision to his Honor. Eleven of us sniffed a holiday, but the twelfth said he smelt a rat. "Wilson," said the Judge, "take this jury before Judge McCarthy." We were at once paraded into an adjoining room, with a small throne, a small table and twelve small chairs. Judge McCarthy was one of three associate Justices, and, as the calendar was heavy, two of them were sitting simultaneously. After undergoing an experience, before this Judge, precisely similar to that which we had enjoyed before Judge Too—Thompson, in an affair of Justice vs. Law, we were at last intrusted with a case, and were locked up in a room to deliberate. Biddy O'Toole had called Mrs. Margery Flannigan bad names. She had asserted, in the presence of numerous witnesses, that the said Margery was a pickpocket. Our mission was to fix the amount of damages. Biddy, the calumniator, was a washerwoman; her receipts were not large, and her economies were doubtless less. One of us was for giving Mrs. Flannigan $100; another would have preferred six cents. We split the difference, and made it $50. If Biddy puts by ten cents a week, it will take her ten years to pay it. Unless, indeed, she carries the case to the Supreme Court, or the Executive grants her a pardon.

Upon returning with this sage decision, we found the Judge engaged in a case in which we were not required. We sat reverently still, like the first class in geography, until his Honor dismissed us for luncheon. We might have a recess, he said, of 15 minutes. Recess! How the word recalled our school-boy life of twenty years ago! A split cracker with a wad of cheese in it, a drink from the pump, and an apple-core, begged from a bigger boy who had done with the apple. Two cents for a luncheon then, three shillings now. Of course some of us went to Delmonico's, and some to the Chatham-street groceries. The Dutch fore nan went east. The untimely father, the cap'n and a few more of us west. We discussed sandwiches, and tossed off libations, but each endeavored to do it in a judicial way. We paid with coins derived from the coffers of the State, one of which, I regret to say, was counterfeit.

We resumed our duties and commenced our deliberations upon the great case of Tompkins versus Simpkins. It occupied us four days; we were locked up all night; we did not agree, and the State saved its 12 shillings. During the night in question the house of the Dutch foreman was burned to the ground, and while the expectant husband was confined, his wife was confined too. But let us speak with ampler details of the impressive case of Tompkins versus Simpkins.

THE BALTIMORE ELECTION RIOTS.

Statement of Mr. George Kyle.

From the Baltimore Exchange.

Mr. KYLE went to the polls of the Fifteenth Ward, on the morning of the election, at about 8½ o'clock, that being the hour at which the Reform Committee had agreed to meet on the ground. He was accompanied by his brother, Mr. A. B. KYLE, Jr., whose assassination, shortly after, has produced so deep a sensation in the community. On approaching the polls, which were held on Light-street, a few doors north of Lee-street, they saw a long line of men, stretching across the street, and engaged in rigging a flag, or something of the sort. Many other persons were likewise scattered in groups in the neighborhood. When the Messrs. KYLE had arrived near the window, which was not yet opened, Mr. GEORGE H. KYLE was immediately accosted by a bystander, who inquired whether a bundle which was under his arm contained Reform tickets, (as it in fact did,) and almost immediately made a violent effort to snatch them from him. Mr. KYLE turned instantly towards his assailant, moving slightly from his original position, to prevent the tickets from being seized. While in the act of doing so, he heard his brother call out from behind that he had been struck, and turning to look he saw Mr. ADAM B. KYLE, Jr., knock down with his cane a man from the crowd who pressed upon him. At this moment Mr. GEO. H. KYLE received a severe blow from behind, upon his head, accompanied with loud cries from all around of "Kill the ——— ———," "Kill the —— Reformers," and others of a still more offensive and equally threatening character. Drawing a dirk, Mr. KYLE struck at his own assailant, and at the same instant felt the pressure on his left temple of the muzzle of a pistol, in the hand of another of the crowd, which was instantly discharged, burning his head and face terribly, and depositing the wad beneath the surface of the skin. This was the first pistol discharged on the ground. Mr. KYLE fell, stunned, for a few seconds, by the explosion, but rallied almost immediately, and discharged his revolver, as he rose, into the crowd before him, almost every man of whom had a pistol leveled, and the most of whom were shooting at him, pell-mell, as rapidly as they were able. By this time the two brothers, who had been separated when Mr. GEORGE KYLE fell, had got together again on the side of the street opposite to that on which they had been first assaulted, and the whole fire of the crowd was directed upon them from all sides, several muskets being discharged at them from the windows of the Watchman Engine-house, where the polls were held, as well as from the hands of the rioters in the street. Mr. KYLE fired his second barrel as soon as he got upon his feet, and while in the act, received a ball in the right shoulder, which inflicted a most painful wound, and instantaneously disabled his right arm. The ball, which was from a revolver, penetrated to the front of the chest, from which it has since been extracted. Mr. KYLE had scarcely time to take his pistol in his left hand, when he turned and saw his brother fall, with his hand upon his groin, in which he had received a shot that would probably have been fatal, in the opinion of his physicians, had not the terrible wound which he subsequently received in the head precipitated the catastrophe. This part of the murderous onslaught was made at the corner of Light and Little York streets, where Mr. G. H. KYLE again fell to the ground, overcome by the pain and shock of the wound in his shoulder. On rising, he saw his brother still on the ground, but being pressed upon by the crowd, who were shooting and throwing bricks at him from all directions, he backed slowly down Light-street to Lee-street, holding his pistol leveled before him, in his left hand, but unable from pain and weakness, and the l ss of the use of his right hand, to discharge it. At the last mentioned corner, he was shot at with a musket from behind a dray, by one of the miscreants who pursued him, but a blow in the breast from a brick, which prostrated him again on the pavement, was, probably, the means of saving his life. Rising, again, he was able to proceed slowly, but in safety, down Lee-street to Charles-street, where he was met by some gentlemen, who assisted him in reaching his father's house in Hanover-street. While on Lee-street, beyond Charles-street, after the conflict was over, he saw a policeman for the first time that morning. The officer in question came running towards him, with a revolver in his hand, asked his name, told him he ought not to have drawn his pistol, and then left him, with the promise that he would look after his brother. The fate of that unhappy gentleman had already been sealed by the same murderous hands, from which Mr. GEORGE KYLE had so miraculously been able to preserve his own life.

Mr. KYLE distinctly and emphatically asserts that the pistol with which he was wounded in the head, was the first pistol fired, as has been before stated; that he did not draw his own revolver until after he had been himself shot down, and was made the target of the whole crowd about him; that neither he nor his brother raised their hands or used even an angry word until they had been violently assailed, amidst the most threatening imprecautions, by a large, excited and hostile crowd, in which they stood entirely alone, without friend or aid; and that by the vindictive and murderous nature of the onslaught upon them, the number and character of the weapons used, and the unanimity of the whole assemblage in the efforts to take their lives, a deliberate and wholesale purpose of assassination was manifested, from the beginning to the end. The extraordinary fortune of Mr. KYLE'S escape is made conspicuous by the fact that his hat was riddled, and his coat was perforated in the right sleeve, by three pistol bullets, and pierced twice or three times, by some sharp weapon, in the back and skirts.

THE QUESTION OF SLAVERY.

Appeal of American Abolitionists for British Pecuniary Aid.

REMARKABLE LETTER FROM REV. GEO. B. CHEEVER TO REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

From the British (London) Standard, Oct. 7, 1859.

Dr. CHEEVER, as many of our readers are aware, is one of the most able and self-sacrificing friends of the slave in the New World. It was scarcely possible for a minister of the Gospel in the Empire City to pursue a course so straightforward, and to make war with so strong a hand against the slaveholder, without exposing himself on every side to hostile influences. The wonder, therefore, is, not that Dr. CHEEVER suffered so much, but that he has maintained his ground so successfully. It stands to reason, however, that the first to take offence, and the most forward to resent fidelity, are the opulent portion of a congregation, many of whom, in a variety of ways, may be more or less identified with or related to the slaveocracy. The following letter from his own eloquent pen, addressed to Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, and by that gentleman handed to us for publication, will speak for itself:

No. 21 EAST FIFTEENTH-STREET, NEW-YORK, Sept. 1, 1859.

MY DEAR SIR: On my return to the City, I find letters from England, making inquiries with regard to Miss JOHNSTONE, a member of my church, now endeavoring to procure some aid for us in the conflict in which we are engaged against Slavery and the slave power in this country. A number of individuals have been suggested as important to be addressed and put in possession of the facts in regard to the appeal; but, as I am compelled immediately to leave the City again for a little season, and am overwhelmed with engagements, it is quite impossible to meet these suggestions. I have therefore taken the liberty of sending you a copy in part of a letter written to a person in England, in reply to inquiries on this subject. I do this in order that, whether any material aid through Miss JOHNSTONE'S effort on our behalf should have been gained or not, it may be seen and known that her appeal is authentic, and that some of the grounds may be made manifest on which such an effort has become necessary. In answer to an individual making inquiries from England, I have written as follows: Your inquiries as to Miss JOHNSTONE'S effort, and the necessity of it, are natural and just. We did not anticipate nor intend the publicity given to her mission, if it can be so called, but supposed she would, in a quiet and private way, present our cause, she herself possessing the greatest possible confidence of success. From the very urgency of the case and the greatness of our danger, being not only surrounded by enemies without, but beset by foes within, we could not ourselves take any Church action concerning this appeal; but a few of us, convinced that we must have aid from some quarter or be conquered, consented that Miss Johnstone should make what effort she could in Great Britain, and gave her our authentication. At the same time, we made every effort for aid from friends here outside our own church, and, by God's blessing, met with such success that we were carried safely through the financial year, and entered on the necessary arrangements for another. By the entire dismissal of the disaffected party in our church, we are now stronger in the spirit and strength of harmony and unity, but much weakened in pecuniary ability, so that the same appeal for aid must be renewed, and efficient aid must be given, in order that we may be enabled to maintain this citadel of Christ's free Gospel amidst such continued and strenuous efforts for our defeat. I assure you that we do greatly need whatever aid we can get. If it please God to keep us, we shall be kept, and He will provide the way, whether through friends here or abroad. But the conflict is terrible, and the pressure of prejudice, fashion, wealth, power, anger, wrath and malice against us, with the weight of all the Christian conservatism of the country denouncing our course and slandering us as Robespierres and fanatics, render it next to impossible for us to increase in numbers or ability, for men will not join us, except it be here and there a true-hearted Abolitionist whom God sends. God has stirred up some such, and brought them from other churches to ours, and this one thing has been our preservation, for without such aid we must have gone down. But at present no new friends come to our support, while yet the battle waxes hotter and more desperate; and, what is exceedingly depressing and discouraging, the moment we begin to be in arrears financially, the timid and half-hearted ones among us, perhaps fearful lest the whole burden may fall upon them, begin to declare that we must give up all idea of sustaining ourselves; that it is useless to attempt doing this any longer; that it is manifest that preaching against the sin of Slavery is so horribly unpopular that if any man or church undertake it they cannot be supported, but must fail; that we had better give up when we can do so with some dignity, and not be starved out. This cowardice, and the feelings that grow out of it, are most injurious to our cause. We can depend only on a very few. Meantime there is greater need than ever of just such sermons against Slavery as I have been preaching, only a thousand times more able and energetic; and to give up my pulpit now would be disastrous in the extreme to the cause of Christian Abolitionism. It would put an end to any freedom of the pulpit and of God's Word against this gigantic sin; but our expenses are so heavy in consequence of fifteen hundred dollars' ground rent, in addition to all the ordinary charges of a prominent church in the City, that we cannot ourselves meet them; and my course in proclaiming God's Word so freely and fully against Slavery and slaveholding as the sin of man-stealing, set by God in the same catalogue with murder, is so unpopular, arrays all the Christian expediency of all the churches against us with so much bitterness, that it would be quite impossible to make any appeal for aid with any hope of success, even to the churches of our own denomination. Too many of them heartily desire our downfall, and, I suppose, expect year after year to see it. That we have been sustained as we have is a wonder, and to maintain the miracle, if it please God to maintain it, we must still have pecuniary aid. My church will keep united, and will rally round me in defence of my preaching against Slavery only while the few who do not intend to relinquish the struggle are enabled to provide the ways and means of meeting our deficiencies. While we can do that, we can with a tolerable degree of confidence rely on a good majority in our favor, and can keep the church; but the moment we are swamped in money matters, that moment we are overthrown. While God gives me grace, health and strength, and continues the opportunity, I mean to reiterate my efforts with the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. I am endeavoring to reach the conscience of the churches and the ministry in regard to this sin, and to rouse up both to united action against it. If it please God that His Word shall once be freely and generally proclaimed against it, it cannot stand. If He add His Spirit, and really set His Church on fire against the iniquity of making merchandise of men, then we shall see a greater moral and spiritual triumph than the world has ever witnessed since the first age of the Gospel. The manifest abolition of this gigantic and infernal wickedness by the Word and Spirit of God, even after it had been enthroned as the supreme law and policy of our nation, the dictate of our justice, the fruit of our religion, would be so glorious a conquest, so full of praise to God and of shame to wicked men and unbelievers and scoffers, that it is to be infinitely desired and ceaselessly labored after. And, though sometimes we are almost in despair, yet, when we remember that the Word of God has really not yet been tried in the conflict, but excluded from it, muzzled, suffocated, buried in silence, or perverted into sanction of the sin, so that its omnipotence is a power yet in reserve, we cannot but hope that God intends this mighty and glorious demonstration, and that, when we are driven more despairingly to Him, and it is perfectly manifest that neither politics, nor statistics, nor theories of free soil, nor free labor, even the profit of freedom, nor any political party, nor any demonstrations of science or philanthropy, can save us, then He will set some souls on fire, and let loose the thunderings and lightnings of His Word, as in the first great Reformation, with such overwhelming majesty that nothing can stand against it. I am a very poor hand to make a beginning, a poor, miserable vessel for such fire, and yet I am constrained into it, and cannot draw back; and as there must be a beginning in some quarter, or there can be no conflagration or cannonading at all, it may as well begin in our church and my ministry as anywhere else, if God pleases. And it is a solemn fact that almost nowhere else is the Word of God proclaimed freely, fully, persistently, on the Sabbath against this sin. A paragraph is sometimes let off, or a sermon on a fast-day; and, if this is not followed by disturbance and wrath henceforward, on the score of that solitary demonstration, the minister and the Church profess to be sufficiently Anti-Slavery, and unite in opposing any Church or minister that will go much further; there is no purpose whatever for the abolition of the sin. Indeed the very men who boast of being Anti-Slavery are opposed to Abolition, and denounce the Abolitionists. So that really in some respects things are in about as bad a state as they can be, and in many quarters the most diabolical Pro-Slavery spirit is conjoined with the highest profession of piety and orthodoxy. It is a perfectly wonderful thing that a real, thorough Abolition orthodox Church, such as mine to a good degree is, can have been trained and supported so long in the heart of a city such as New-York, so large a portion both of the ecclesiastical and mercantile community being in league with slaveholders for the protection of their sin. Meantime, we get no aid from visitors who come to us from abroad, from your own country or elsewhere, for they are always persuaded into a most politic silence, and, having generally some object to accomplish, they desire to keep on the best terms with all parties, and, on the whole, generally are persuaded into the impression that the Abolitionists are a very injudicious and fanatical set of men, and that the sin of Slavery has more to be said in apology on its behalf than Abolitionists are willing to admit. They cannot think that so many good men as they meet with in connection with this sin are wholly mistaken or wholly guilty in sanctioning it for a time in some degree. Thus their influence is with the Slave Power, not against it, and they themselves, especially after traveling South, lose their horror of the cruelty and the crime, and begin to think that there is no cruelty and little guilt inhering in it, but that the great guilt lies in the course of these radical men, who do not cease, on the authority of God, to proclaim Slavery and slaveholding as sin, and only sin, continually. I wish, with all my heart, that I could come to England, but it is not possible just now. I cannot leave my post, if God gives me strength and the possibility to continue in it. The people of England have very little idea of the terrible extent to which the sanction of Slavery and opposition against all agitation about it as a sin have got possession of the churches, so that the revivals of religion and the revival of the Slave-trade may go together without any quarrel. Or, if there be any outcry against the foreign Slave-trade, there is an equally earnest outcry, and much more bitter, against all those who denounced the domestic Slave-trade and American Slavery. Of a truth, we are in a dreadful state, and I do not see any avoiding of the wrath of God or any escape from ruin except by His Word and Spirit,—His Word proclaimed against the reigning guilt, and His Spirit in accompanying the proclamation. Pardon this long letter; be assured that, whatever aid you may be able to gain for us, or whatever help you can extend to Miss Johnstone in getting aid, is truly and greatly needed, and will be most thankfully received.

I am glad to hear that FREDERICK DOUGLAS is to be in England this Winter. He is a remarkable man. I had the pleasure of listening to an address from him on the recent anniversary of West India emancipation—a most eloquent and powerful speech, that would have done credit to Mr. WEBSTER, had he been capable of its moral elevation.

I am about publishing a new work on the guilt of Slavery and the crime of slaveholding demonstrated by the Old and New Testament Scripture; and such is the unpopularity of the subject that my publishers will not issue it, and I am obliged to publish by subscription on my own responsibility. With the highest respect, yours most truly,

GEORGE B. CHEEVER.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

THE KENTUCKY OPPOSITION.

Their Position and Programme for the Next Congress and the Next Year—Their Views on the Newport and Harper's Ferry Affairs.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, (Ky.,) Thursday, Nov. 3, 1859.

It is hard to tell where our Opposition "leaders" now stand. They would have it that they are not "Republicans" nor "Democrats," but somewhere between.

On the "Territorial question" they are "Dred Scott Decision" men, if such a decision has been made. But of that, contrary to their general drift, they now and then profess not to be satisfied. They would even go with Senator SEWARD for the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, as a measure for peace, if the Constitution, as expounded by the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case is not in their way; and they occasionally say they are not certain that it is. But they incline to think the Court has decided, or will soon decide, that Congress is bound, immediately or mediately, to provide for the adequate protection of slave property in all Territories, according to the necessities of the case. For Congress to shirk its Constitutional duties in any emergency, would be to deny the fundamental principle of its existence. Why have a Federal Legislature if it shall abdicate to "squatters" its most important powers, as already or soon to be defined by the Federal Judiciary?

But our Oppositionists' intervention proclivities may not carry them as far, practically, as some anticipate. Many of them seem disposed to have the Presidential canvass here and elsewhere conducted on other grounds than the annoying Slavery question. They deem it advisable to ignore it and elect a President uncommitted on this—not identified with any partisan view of it—pledged by himself and his friends not to use his Executive or personal influence one way or the other about it—to be neutral and impartial, and leave it entirely to the discretion of Congress. Other things, of much more immediate practical import, demand the attention of the American people, regardless of party or section. The corruption, incompetency, and impotency (except for mischief) of the Administration and its party, should be the absorbing and telling issues. Many of the Democrats themselves, if sincere in their condemnation of the Administration in most respects, will unite with the National Opposition to prevent another such. Its corruption, squandering, and bungling have been berated by many of the first Democrats in every State of the Union, from Louisiana and Texas to Maine, and from Florida to Oregon. They still berate the general course of Mr. BUCHANAN, and are morally bound to unite with all independent conservatives for efficient opposition thereto in the next canvass and the next Congress.

Accordingly Kentucky Oppositionists generally appear to me willing to coöperate with all, of what ever name, in and out of Congress, for a thorough exposure of the divers enormities and atrocities "committed under the seal of the United States of America." They would have the Executive departments overhauled, cleaned out, and kept clean. No more party corruption should be suffered to prevail at Washington. The common end is this—the coalition of men of all parties for the rebuke of Bucaneer management, and the restoration of the purity and nationality of the earlier Presidencies. The next Speakership should be intrusted to some other than a friend of the Administration—to any one who will exert all his authority and influence for the carrying out of this really Democratic object. Republicans of the House, who show themselves actuated by this motive, are not to be tabooed, as if tainted with Harper's Ferry treason. Their actions may prove that they are not, in tendency and fact, near such enemies to the perpetuity of our National Government, nor such traitors to the national interests of the American people as some "Democrats."

Practically, in my opinion, most Kentucky Oppositionists prefer to waive their theoretical "Territorial" hobbies, to subordinate them to something more beneficial and honorable to the nation. They can sympathize and work with all who will do the same, be they Anti-Administration Democrats, Americans or Republicans.

As to the Harper's Ferry raid and the Newport mob, I should trust that nobody in Kentucky approves of either, in any aspect or for any purpose. If Federal parties are to rise or fall on the strength of such outbreaks of mob spirit; if the success of parties depends upon encouraging, winking at, and making capital of mob violence and mob sectionalism, sectional party spirit has gone far enough. I am sorry to see that, while leading members of the Kentucky Press, even some of the "Opposition," have not a word to say against the beastly outrage upon Mr. BAILEY'S Free South—a fellow-member, entitled as much as they, or the few slave-soil papers of Missouri, to freedom of utterance: they denounce only the Harper's invasion, and try to implicate therein even Gov. SEWARD! Now, many Kentuckians, irrespective of party, would about as soon attempt to implicate JAMES GUTHRIE, because his name appears in the memoranda of REALF as "my very dear friend of Louisville, Ky.," or Gov. WILLARD, because COOKE is his brother-in-law, or JOHN COCHRANE, because he is a nephew of GERRIT SMITH, or our venerable President, because FORBES says he wrote to J. B. about something, or Senator SEWARD, because FORBES says he broached something to him which the Senator would not listen to.

Neither Kentucky Democrats nor Oppositionists have anything to gain, in 1860, by holding Gov. SEWARD and the Republican Party alone responsible for doings at Harper's Ferry, which they do not frown on when before their own eyes at home. If the party agitation of Slavery is to be kept up, in and out of Congress, because of outbreaks for which all parties, if any, may be more or less to blame, there can be no union of the opponents of the administration, either in Congress or before the people. The Kentucky Opposition cannot further their national ends without resisting all this slavery agitation. PONTIAC.

MURDER AT STATE-LINE, MASS.—The Albany Argus, Nov. 8, says: "On Saturday evening a man by the name of REYNOLDS, a blacksmith by trade, who resides at Richmond, Berkshire County, Mass., and a laborer by the name of JAMES O'BRIEN, residing at West Stockbridge, were in company in the town of Canaan, Columbia County, New-York, but near the railroad depôt at State-Line, Mass., and got into an altercation. They went into a distillery, or rectifying shop, and there got into a fight. They were separated and put out of doors, when REYNOLDS stabbed O'BRIEN in the abdomen, so that his bowels gushed out and he died in ten minutes. REYNOLDS escaped, and at 1 o'clock yesterday had not been arrested. Officers were in pursuit of him, and he can hardly fail of being arrested. We understand that REYNOLDS had purchased a jug of spirits at the distillery during the day, and it may well be supposed that this had much to do with the murder. A Coroner from Hudson was expected to hold an inquest yesterday afternoon. O'BRIEN leaves a wife and three children in destitute circumstances."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Hartford Times says it appears that the murderous jealousy which actuated Othniel Russel, the returned Californian, to attempt the butcher of Rev. Mr. Miner, in Dainelsonville, on the 11th ult., was not without foundation in fact. Miner has made a full confession, acknowledging that he has had intercourse with Mrs. Russell for two years past, while a part of the time he has been pastor of the Baptist Church in Killingly. He has left for parts unknown, leaving a wife and three or four children in Chestnut Hill village. The infuriated husband, it will be remembered, after bringing Miner into the house where Mrs. Russell was, charged him with having induced and aided his wife to get a divorce, and with having been improperly intimate with her, and then attempted to kill the Reverend rascal with a bowie-knife. Miner (as we stated at the time) escaped with some severe cuts, and ran for his life, Russell firing two pistol balls at him as he ran, but without effect.

The Rochester Democrat, Nov. 7, has the following story of an elopement: "An elderly gentleman, named Lewis Munsion, who resides in Watervliet, Albany County, arrived here Saturday evening in pursuit of a runaway daughter and a young man named George H. Hootout, who, although married to the eldest daughter of Mr. Munsion, is supposed to have seduced and enticed away the missing girl. It appears that a week ago last Saturday, Miss Munsion, with her brother, a lad of twelve years, accompanied by Hootout, went to Ballston, where Mr. Munsion has another daughter residing. Hootout went on business, and returned on the Monday following with the boy, Miss Munsion remaining to visit her sister till the succeeding Tuesday, when Hootout went after her. They left Ballston together, and have not been heard from since."

Considerable excitement exists in Pierpont, Ashtabula County, owing to the following singular circumstances. A Miss J. R. Hough, 16 years of age, was taken suddenly sick on Wednesday evening, Oct. 26, and was thought to expire on Friday morning following. On Sunday funeral services were held at the Methodist Church, in Pierpont, Rev. L. E. Beardsley officiating. Before burial it was observed that appearances were different from those usually producing morbid death. On Monday, October 31, after remaining in the ground twenty-four hours, the remains were exhumed. The flesh had an unusual warmth, the limbs were relaxed, the countenance natural, with no indications of putrefaction. Up to Tuesday evening the same anomaly was apparent, and physicians advised keeping the remains until further developments.

The Albany Journal, Nov. 7, says: "An artist by the name of Swinton, residing in Lydius-street, near the Burt farm, attempted to commit suicide on Saturday night by shooting himself with a pistol. It appears that he aimed for his heart, but the ball missed the mark, and passed through his left lung. He refused to permit the doctor to see or dress the wound. He was alive last evening with no prospect of recovering. It appears that for some time past his mind has been deranged. A few months ago he lost his wife, upon whom he doted, and since then he has been melancholy. When quite young, he fell, injuring his head, from which he never fully recovered, and has since frequently given evidence of temporary derangement."

On Saturday, Nov. 5, while two Syracuse police officers were on the Hudson River Railrail ferry-boat, at Albany, having in charge two prisoners, whom they had brought up in the train, one of them, hand-cuffed, sprang into the river. The prisoners were two notorious thieves, whose depredations have been very numerous. One of them, named Wm. P. Avery, was arrested in Jersey City, and stands charged with a burglary in Illinois. The other—the one that jumped overboard, and was drowned or killed—went by several names. In Indiana, where he broke jail, he went by the name of W. H. Rouse. In Cincinnati, Ohio, where he committed a burglary, he was known by the name of W. H. Reeves. In Syracuse, where he also committed a burglary, he assumed the name of W. H. Riley.

On the 12th of October last, Mrs. Mary Kuckler, of Newstead, Erie County, N. Y., died under circumstances which excited suspicion. Some two weeks before, she was taken suddenly ill, after eating breakfast, with symptoms of poisoning by arsenic. Her husband, James S. Kuckler, is an irregular practitioner of medicine, and attended her medically during her illness, prescribing for her from time to time. The circumstances of her illness and an alleged illicit connection of Kuckler with another woman, led to suspicion on the part of the neighbors, which has grown until the Coroner was called upon to hold an inquest. The result was the arrest of Kuckler on a charge of murder.

Messrs. A. H. Jones and H. M. C. Brown, who have been engaged as United States surveyors for the last twenty years, have recently completed the survey of the boundary lines of the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, from the eighth to the one hundredth meridian, extending from Red River to the Canadian River, in a manner entirely satisfactory to the Government. In 1855 a treaty was made with the Choctaws and

DESIGNS FOR THE NEW PLYMOUTH CHURCH.—The Trustees of Plymouth Church having offered four premiums for the best designs for a new church edifice, announce to the architects concerned, and to the public, the following decisions:

1. The plans of Mr. Charles Duggin, of New-York, have been selected for the new buildings.
2. The second premium, of $500, has been awarded to Mr. J. R. Hamilton, of New-York.
3. The third premium, of $250, to Messrs. Saelzer & Valk, New-York.
4. The fourth premium, of $150, to Mr. Julius W. Adams, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Trustees desire to express their high appreciation of the skill and fidelity of all the architects competing, and their sense of the great merit of all the designs submitted.

The admirable designs of Richard M. Hunt and J. Wrey Mould, failed of consideration only from the great increase of their estimated cost above the sum mentioned in the "statement" of the Trustees.

All the plans submitted to the Trustees are now on exhibition at the parlors of the Plymouth Church, entrance on Cranberry-st., (Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, Nov. 8, 9, and 10,) admission free.

The designs not included in the premium-list will be returned to the authors upon their proper order, made to the Secretary of the Board, Mr. H. S. WELD, No. 41 Willow-st., Brooklyn, after Thursday.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

As our first edition goes to press, we have very slight data at hand by which to measure the results of the elections which took place in various portions of the Union. The general scope, however, of the returns before us, exhibits a decided probability of the defeat of the Administration upon every portion of the well-contested field, and the growing strength of the Opposition. The election returns from the City and County of New-York are very incomplete, and scarcely afford room for conjecture as to the general result. In the City, Mr. Floyd Jones, the Democratic nominee for Secretary of State, who is also on the American Utica ticket, gains less than 1,000 on the majority for Judge Parker last year, and will leave the City about 20,000 ahead of Mr. Leavenworth. The Country returns, as far as heard from, are but partially in his favor, compared with the vote of last year. Of the election of that portion of the Repnblican ticket adopted by the Americans at Utica, there is scarcely a doubt. There is also every probability that the Republicans have carried both branches of the Legislature.

The Massachusetts canvass has had the result generally anticipated. Gov. Banks is doubtless reelected by an increased majority; his two competitors, Briggs and Butler, failing to secure a joint vote equal to the Opposition vote of the last Gubernatorial election. Mr. F. H. Underwood, late editor of the Atlantic Monthly, is chosen Clerk of the Suffolk Courts; and Mr. Charles Hale, of the Boston Advertiser, late Speaker of the House, is reelected to a seat in that body, by two majority.

The returns received from New-Jersey, at the hour we go to press, are confined to Mercer Couty. If they may be accepted as indication of the entire State, there is no doubt of the election of Charles S. Olden to the gubernatorial chair. Mercer is, however, the county in which Mr Olden resides; and his undoubted popularity may have had an important local effect upon the result

In Wisconsin, Mr. Randall, the Republican candidate for Governor, has made large gains upon his vote at the last preceding Gubernatorial canvass, and is doubtless elected.

The Mayoralty election at Detroit has eventuated in favor of the Republican candidate.

Of the Louisiana elections, the few returns we have are restricted to New-Orleans, where the Opposition ticket appears to have triumphed at all points. The municipal candidates, and the Congressmen chosen, are all hostile to the present Federal Administration.

All anticipations of extraordinary excitement in the City yesterday, in connection with the elections, were fortunately disappointed. Probably no occasion of the kind has ever passed off more quietly. The Registry law appeared to work favorably through the City. Not a single disturbance of any magnitude occurred, and but one or two arrests were made for attempts at illegal voting. At Tammany Hall the professional politicians had a glorious time over the majorities which the Democrats had secured in the City, while at the Republican Headquarters there was a feast on the anticipation of good things to come from the rural districts.

The trial of the Harper's Ferry conspirators is proceeding actively at Charlestown. On Saturday, the colored prisoner, Wm. Copeland, was found guilty of the three counts of the indictment, upon which Brown was convicted; but a bill of exceptions was admitted, on the ground that a negro, not being, under the Dred Scott decision, a citizen of the United States, must be incapable of treason. The indictment against the prisoner Cook was submitted to the Grand Jury on Monday. In the absence of that body, Andrew Stevens was brought to the bar, when Mr. Hunter, the prosecuting attorney, announced that after conference with Gov. Wise, he was disposed to hand Stevens over to the Federal authorities, in order that his trial might elicit evidence. now in the hands of Government, incriminating "leading Abolitionists of the North." A conversation between the several counsel ensued, at the close of which Mr. Hunter consented to use the prisoner Haylett for this laudable purpose; a decision eventually reversed at the request of Stevens, who preferred the higher tribunal. The case of Cook, against whom a true bill was found, was taken up yesterday. After an opening speech by Mr. Harding, the counsel for the State produced in evidence a full confession of Cook, of the purport of which we are uninformed. A Jury was empannelled, and the trial proceeded.

The Alumni of Columbia College held their annual meeting last evening, in the lecture-room of the Historical Society building. An oration was delivered by Rev. Mancius Hutton, D. D. and a poem by Isaac Lawrence, Esq. The exercises passed off very pleasantly.

About fifty Italians assembled last evening in the Stuyvesant Institute to take measures for aiding Garibaldi in his efforts to obtain a million muskets. Resolutions were passed professing sympathy with Garibaldi, but the paucity of attendance prevented any definite action being taken.

At the Stock Exchange, yesterday, the depression of Monday continued through the early dealings, but the market finally assumed more steadiness. New-York Central, 70¾@⅞; Missouri Sixes, 84½. The Money Market shows little or no variation. The Exchanges for the Persia closed 110@110½ on London, and f5.14¾ on Paris, at 60 days; and 110¾@⅞ on London, and f5.11¼ on Paris, at sight. These terms being rather low for Specie shipments, the steamer will take but $250,000 as at present reported.

Flour was more inquired for, and prices of low and medium brands were very firm. Wheat was in good request at strengthening prices. Corn and Rye were heavy. Barley was depressed and lower. Oats attracted more attention. Coffee, Cotton, Sugars, Rice, Linseed Oil, Hay, Hides, Candles, Tallow and Whisky were in fair demand. Fish, Hops, Metals, Naval Stores, Teas and Tobacco were moderately dealt in. The movements in Provisions were restricted. Pork favored buyers. Freights were brisker.

Kansas—Official Vote on the Constitution.—Gov. Medary has proclaimed the official vote of Kansas on the Wyandotte Constitution. The vote was as follows: For, 10,421; against, 5,530. Majority in favor of the Constitution, 4,891. For the Homestead clause, there were cast 8,788 votes, and against it 4,772; showing a majority of 4,016 in favor of the Homestead.

The Election.

All that we yesterday morning said in commendation of the improved efficiency of our City Police force under the existing régime, was abundantly borne out by the events of the day. The election of State officers passed off in the Metropolis as quietly as if the Bowery had suddenly become an Arcadia, and the "Dead Rabbits" as innocent as the timid creatures whose name they bear. All day long a huge omnibus, detailed to carry the reserves of the Police to any point at which their services might suddenly be needed, creaked idly on its wheels at the station; and there was nothing in the aspect of the streets to remind a stranger that the Empire City of the Empire State was taking to itself a new array of public servants, save here and there upon the sidewalks a few upright pens or stalls, from which the vote-distributors of the various parties peered ruminatingly forth upon the passers-by, and proffered their ballots to the sovereigns. At night a number of harmless bonfires were lit in various quarters of the City, and an affectionate set-to tempered the rejoicings of victorious Tammany.

If the exercise of popular sovereignty were never attended with more disorder and difficulty than marked it yesterday in New-York, the friends of American institutions would have little to explain away, and nothing to blush for. Due allowance must of course be made for the comparative absence from yesterday's election of anything like intense personal or political issues, the premature attempt of the Administration organs to manufacture a tremendous popular excitement out of their unrevealed "revelations" of the Harper's Ferry affair having signally failed; and the ardor of the Republicans having been decidedly dampened by the incubus of John Brown and his friends. Nevertheless, the systematic way in which quiet was preserved throughout the capital, reflects great credit upon our municipal authorities, and we commend the example afresh to our sister Cities of Baltimore and New-Orleans.

Of the political results of the day, both in the City and the State, so far as yet ascertained, it is only clear that the efforts of the Administration to terrify the country back into its allegiance, have signally failed. That the evident defeat of the Democracy in this State and New-Jersey is to be thus interpreted, and not in any angry sectional sense, might be inferred from the fact that the telegraph echoes from Louisiana these new voices of the North, were it not also made plain in the peculiar complexion of the opposition which seems to have come off victorious in New-Jersey and New-York.

Should the indications of the returns thus far received be fully borne out, we may, of course, expect the abdication of Mr. Buchanan, the Constitution having solemnly staked the character and existence of his Government upon the elections in New-Jersey and New-York, and Mr. Slidell having led his legions to defeat in Louisiana.

Too Much Zeal.

The Governor of Virginia appears to be quite determined that the "irrepressible conflict," which he so much delights to denounce, shall not be suffered to die away because its sponsor, Mr. Seward, chooses to turn his back upon American politics and to disport himself for a while among the Pyramids of Egypt and over the sands of the Desert. Mr. Wise either possesses, or fancies that he possesses, the cipher of a mighty conspiracy against the peace and dignity of the Union, and he is bent upon pursuing the dread secret of which he has caught a glimpse through all the ramifications of the Republican labyrinth.

On Monday, at Charlestown, the case of Andrew Stevens, one of John Brown's lieutenants, was on the point of being tried, when Mr. Hunter, the prosecuting attorney, interrupted the proceedings by stating that he had received a telegram from Gov. Wise, requesting him to reserve Stevens for trial by the Federal authorities. This condescension to a Government which Mr. Wise's organ, the Richmond Enquirer, has so vehemently assailed as effete, incapable and unworthy of receiving any consideration from the Commonwealth of Virginia, was speedily explained by Mr. Hunter. On a mere question of convicting and hanging the culprits actually in her grasp, the Old Dominion needs no help from the Union. If necessary she could, no doubt, find a headsman to decapitate and executioners to draw and quarter these high-traitors in the old chivalric fashion. But there are other victims whom Gov. Wise desires to sacrifice, and these can only be reached through the National Executive. The Federal Courts are, therefore, to be charged with the duty of listening to the revelations of one, at least, of the Harper's Ferry insurgents, in order that the President may take steps for securing the arrest and punishment of certain distinguished Northern accomplices of John Brown. Stevens was at first selected for the honor of swinging from a national gibbet; and when Mr. Hunter showed a disposition to re-legate that opportunity to another of the prisoners, Stevens loudly urged his claims, and finally succeeded in procuring his deliverance from the short shrift of the sitting jury, before him. The proceedings against Cook at once began; and Stevens awaits the action of the National authorities.

This new feature in the pending State trials will arrest, of course, very general attention. If it should prove eventually that the expectations with which Stevens has been reserved to act as a conductor between the national feeling and the electrifying revelations which Gov. Wise so confidently awaits, are as baseless as the charges originally fished up from the recesses of Colonel Forbes's famous carpet-bag, the indefatigable agitator of Virginia will find himself playing a very undesirable part before the country. It is no light thing to assume the responsibility of urging accusations against prominent Northern statesmen, which all rational men must be very slow to entertain seriously. And if (as we by no means wish even remotely to hint) this formal expansion of the "Plot" and its implications has been attempted mainly to support a preconcerted course of political and partisan intrigues, the experiment will not be likely, by its results, to encourage the inventors to a repetition. The feeling of the Northern people, as we have repeatedly taken occasion of late to show, is just now particularly friendly to the South, and particularly hostile to all superfluous political disturbers of our common peace. But the Northern people cannot be expected to take any special pleasure in listening to vague and sweeping accusations of treason against Northern public men of standing and character; and unless these accusations are to be really sustained by something more presentable than the wild inferences by which alone up to this time they have been connected with the names of various prominent leaders of one great political party at the North, the irritating process of turning them over and over before the whole country in a Federal Court can do nothing but harm.

Gov. Wise, and his sensationist friends at the North as well as at the South, appears to us to be in very great danger of disregarding the diplomatic maxim which forbids all excess even in the most politic zeal.

They could hardly do their partisan antagonists a better service, than to interrupt the general and decided crystalization of the National sentiment in regard to the nature and tendency of the strictly sectional opposition to the Slave-Power, by attacking individual men with charges of complicity in purposes which the whole North indignantly repudiate. This is a case in which a single failure on the part of the Government to maintain its allegations will outweigh in mischievous results all the good that can be looked for from a dozen victories.

It may be important to bring "prominent Abolition fanatics before the Federal Bar." But we venture to think it decidedly more important to bring the principles and mainsprings of the political agitation which alone invests the said fanatics with a transient power, calmly and dispassionately before the bar of public opinion. And this is assuredly not to be done by clamorous exaggerations, pompous mystifications, or a perpetually rising tide of passionate invective.

Wanted—A Police.

We should like to know how long that famous body of men—the "old Police"—are to be allowed to impede all efforts that are made for the preservation of public peace and order. They have for two years, through no fault of the citizens, through no fault of the Commissioners, through no fault of the Courts, through nobody's fault but their own, been in a state of abject dependence upon the charitable exertions of a few friendly Democrats. They persist in waiting for relief at the hands of the Courts, in preference, apparently, to seeking any other mode of subsistence. Nothing will satisfy them but to be Policemen. No other walk of life can tempt them. Their rage for the pursuit and capture of criminals seems to be insatiable. We are sorry such zeal in the public service should have a damper put on it in any way. We should be delighted if it is finally discovered that these gentlemen were wrongfully ousted, and are lawfully entitled to serve their country and receive pay therefor. But in the meantime, we must say they are and have been as great bores and nuisances as any city was ever afflicted with. Their sorrows have made such an impression upon the susceptible hearts of the Supervisors, that it has been impossible from the outset to get them to allow the appointment of anything like as many men under the new law as the City requires, unless the Commissioners agree to confer all the new appointments upon persons who defied their authority, defied the Legislature, defied the courts, and clove to Fernando, and only desisted from their mutiny, when it was certain that mutiny would not pay.

There were, no doubt, a large number of excellent officers among them, and a very large proportion of them probably acted in strict accordance with their own sense of duty. Probably, too the Commissioners have dealt harshly with them, and been somewhat too pertinacious in refusing to entertain their claims to reappointment. All this may be true, but none of this affords any comfort to the public, whose houses and other possessions the paucity of our present Police force nightly exposes to the assaults of evil-doers. It is too much to ask of us, who neither mutinously adhered to the fortunes of the illustrious Fernando, nor yet obstinately refused batons to Democratic candidates, to expose our throats to be cut and our purses to be abstracted in order to testify our sense of the claims of the "Old Police." They have the courts to go to, and we wish most sincerely they would go to them, and stay in them; but, in the meantime, we think it is not too much to ask our friends, the Supervisors, to provide us with as many officers as may be necessary for our safety. We are not particular as to the political opinions of those who watch over us. If we can only get as many able-bodied individuals in uniform as may be necessary to save our skulls from fracture and our safes from explosion, we promise to remain utterly indifferent ad hoc to their views of "Old Brown's" behavior, or of Squatter Sovereignty.

We make these remarks in consequence of the refusal of the Supervisors to appropriate money for the employment of Special Constables, to assist the Police in keeping order, yesterday, unless the vote were saddled with the condition that none but members of the "Old Force" should be engaged. The Board seems to have thoroughly made up its mind that any disorders or outrages are preferable to peace preserved by men who have not bore arms under Fernando. It may be that this decision is based upon the purest sympathy with the oppressed and wronged. We are willing to give them all possible credit for the goodness of their motives, but we must say it is a highly inconvenient form of philanthropy. If we have much more of it we shall be tempted into wishing the "old" Police to get an honest livelihood in some other way than as policemen—a course which, so far, they seem excessively unwilling to adopt.

The Great Austrian Swindle.—We commented a day or two ago upon the extraordinary revelations in regard to Austrian financiering during the last few years, which have just taken place at Vienna, and have carried consternation into the hearts of all holders of Austrian securities. The Finance Department of the Imperial Government has now published a communication in regard to one important class of national obligations, which more than justifies the anxiety now openly expressed in regard to the good faith of the Empire. In 1854 an Imperial Patent was issued authorizing the Baron de Bruck to raise a Voluntary Loan of 500,000,000 florins, and this loan has been constantly negotiated ever since in the Austrian and other markets on the basis fixed by this decree. The Baron de Bruck now makes the following placid statement of the operations carried on under cover of the patent of 1854:

"The last instalment of the Voluntary (National) Loan made in the year 1854 having, with the exception of some few subscriptions, been paid on the 24th August, it appears that the total amount of obligations issued by the State during the last few years on account of the debt in question is 611,571,300 florins, of which sum 26,492,100 florins have been paid over to the Sinking Fund. Thus the sum for which obligations are now in circulation is 585,079,200 florins, with which the Voluntary Loan of the year 1854 is definitely closed."

From which it appears that the Kaiser Francis Joseph has calmly and dishonestly appropriated to his imperial purposes more than 40,000,000 of dollars advanced by his own subjects and foreign capitalists expressly on the faith of his own decree! In the face of such a fact as this, and of the "commercial" operation at Amsterdam, to which we have before alluded, it can hardly be deemed surprising that the House of Hapsburg should have become bankrupt in character as well as in purse. Neither Mississippi, nor Pennsylvania, nor Spain itself, has quite matched these ingenious devices of the most "chivalric" and "aristocratic" of European empires; and Austria may find, perhaps, in some future crisis of her fate, that neither Magenta nor Solferino struck so deep and deadly a wound into her vitals as these flagrant financial scandals must ultimately inflict.

A Disgraceful Appeal.

Some time last Summer a paragraph was copied from some of the English newspapers, stating that a Miss Johnstone had made her appearance in England for the purpose of collecting money to sustain Dr. Cheever's Church in the City of New-York. As a general thing the statement was entirely discredited. It was not considered possible that any Church here should have authorized a begging agency in Great Britain on its own behalf.

We republish to-day from the British Standard a letter from Dr. Cheever himself to Mr. Spurgeon, which leaves no room for further doubt. In this letter Dr. Cheever represents his Church as a missionary establishment for the dissemination of Abolitionism among the New-York heathen, and as in danger of being immediately crushed and destroyed without pecuniary aid. He speaks of himself as an apostle of the only true faith,—as "preaching just such sermons as are especially needed here at the present moment,"—and as the only clergyman who "freely, fully and persistently" proclaims the Word of God on this subject in New-York. He considers it almost a miracle that a "thorough abolition orthodox Church such as mine is,' should have been sustained here so long, especially considering the terrible conflict which he has been compelled to maintain with "prejudice, fashion, wealth, power, anger, wrath and malice;" but is quite satisfied that this miracle can be continued no longer without more money. And as the more wealthy portion of his own congregation have left him, and he can get no further assistance at home, he authorizes the appeal of Miss Johnstone to the Abolitionists of England for help.

What pecuniary response this appeal of mendicant Pharisaism may receive in the quarter to which it is addressed, remains to be seen. What judgment will be pronounced upon it by the people of this country, it is not at all difficult to conjecture. Dr. Cheever may be, as he represents himself, the only preacher in this City who dares to speak the truth on the subject of Slavery; he may, of all the clergymen among us, be the one whose ministrations are so vastly important to mankind as to warrant a call upon England to sustain them by her gifts. But even if this were so, it would have been quite as modest and becoming for Dr. Cheever to permit somebody else to make the discovery and proclaim the fact. Coming from his own lips it savors sadly of a most unbecoming egotism and self-conceit. Dr. Cheever seems quite unconscious of any other cause of the decay of his influence and the decline of his Church than the fidelity and ability with which he proclaims the truth. But there are other preachers who denounce Slavery quite as zealously, if not with as much intemperance and malignant passion, as Dr. Cheever, who yet have not been compelled to send abroad for pecuniary support, nor would have stooped to that degrading alternative even if they had been compelled to remove to some more congenial field of labor. The secession from Dr. Cheever's Church which occurred two years ago, was not the consequence of his Anti-Slavery opinions or sermons, half so much as of the acrid, malignant, intolerant temper which he infuses into his public efforts, and which alienates the sympathies even of those who agree with him in sentiment.

But aside from the personal character of this appeal, the fact that Abolitionism anywhere in America calls upon Great Britain for pecuniary aid, may reasonably arouse the general indignation of the community. The less British Abolitionists have to do with Slavery in the United States, the better for them and for us. It is our own concern, solely and exclusively. Its evils are ours, and upon us alone devolves the responsibility of removing them. Our own Abolitionists have done quite enough towards plunging the country into turmoil and strife, and rendering impracticable any wise and prudent measures of relief. It is going a step too far to call in foreign aid and solicit from abroad the means of sustaining a disastrous agitation upon this subject at home It must be a proud reflection for Dr. Cheever and the "true-hearted Abolitionists" who listen to his discourses, that they are indebted for the privilege to British alms, and that every denunciation of his own country which he utters is paid for with foreign gold. It is certainly not a little remarkable that any number of men in New-York could be found willing to authorize such an appeal for foreign aid as this. They must evidently look upon New-York as a pagan land, and upon themselves as genuine heathen, who can only receive Christian truth at the hands of missionaries supported from abroad. If the Church of the Puritans has fallen to this point of degradation, it is quite time it were suppressed. And if Dr. Cheever can find nobody in New-York willing to pay for his preaching, he should either preach gratuitously or seek some field where his labors are more highly, if not more justly, appreciated.

The Texas Border Outbreak.—Public attention is at this moment diverted from the outbreak at Harper's Ferry to one of another sort in the region of Brownsville, Texas, headed by Cortinas, said to be a Mexican. The extent of this guerilla chieftain's operations, and the pertinacity with which he pursues his murderous plans, would lead to the belief that he is giving free course to deep-seated and long-smothered feelings of revenge. If the information we have at hand respecting this man is correct, and we have every reason to believe it is, such is the true state of the case.

Cortinas is about 45 years of age, and was born at a ranch on the Texas side of the Rio Grande, known as Edinburgh, some ninety miles above Brownsville. During the Texas war with Mexico, the family of Cortinas was, according to his story, robbed and unmercifully treated by the Americans. Since that period he has led rather a predatory life, sometimes at peace, but in the main, robbing, stealing horses, and in various ways evincing his hatred of the whites. A few years since, one of his friends or companions was executed at Brownsville, and Cortinas himself was imprisoned at that place eighteen months ago, and on his escape or release, he vowed signal vengeance against the Sheriff and other citizens of the town by whom he considered himself grievously wronged. It is in fulfillment of his oath of revenge that Cortinas is now, with other disaffected Texans of Mexican birth, half-breeds, Indians and ruffians of various grades, endeavoring to lay waste Brownsville and its vicinity. This affair does not originate in any ill feeling on the part of Mexicans on the other side of the Rio Grande; and whether Cortinas or any of his band have in reality experienced unjust treatment from their fellow-citizens in Texas, we of course do not pretend to decide. It is probable these outlaws will continue the war upon Brownsville until a strong force arrives, when they will doubtless flee into Mexico.

A Whale Among Minnows.

We read in the Herald a few mornings ago that the Editor of the Times had been arrested for a libel on Commodore Vanderbilt. The statement was untrue at the time it was made,—but in the course of two or three days it was verified by the service of the writ. So yesterday's Tribune announces that the Commodore has commenced a civil suit for libel against us, laying his damages at $100,000. Up to the present time the statement is as unfounded as the Herald's was:—but we presume it will come all right in the course of to-day, and that the suit will be commenced in due form. It must be extremely agreeable for a whale like the Commodore to have a couple of cuttle-fish, like the Herald and Tribune, to run before his nose, and by darkening the water, point out to himself and others the path he is about to take.

We are at some little loss to understand the meaning of this sudden floundering of the Commodore—this explosion of blubber at the prick of a newspaper paragraph. We don't know whether it indicates that he is growing old and touchy, or that he is becoming ambitious of notoriety and seeks an occasion for spreading the knowledge of his steamboat operations in Central America and elsewhere, before an admiring world. Hitherto he has rather affected the shade. His most brilliant and splendid achievements have usually been performed in secret, neither the world at large nor the very man he was dealing with, being admitted to any very satisfactory knowledge of the object and scope of his manœuvres. It is quite possible that his disposition in this particular has changed, and that he now proposes to make a clean breast of it—to open the windows of his soul, if it contains any such accommodations, and let the public at large share the knowledge of his transactions. If this is his object, he has hit upon a sagacious method of accomplishing it.

The Commodore is already understood to be a very rich man, but he will be considerably richer when he recovers $100,000 from the Times for damages it has inflicted upon his character. We take it for granted he will bestow it upon some benevolent institution—Congress for example, or the Government of Nicaragua, or perhaps Gen. Walker.

Wendell Phillips in Virginia.—The Richmond Enquirer reprints from our columns the lecture of Wendell Phillips on the Harper's Ferry insurrection, and makes use of it, with deliberate intent to inflame the feeling of disunion in the Southern States. The following paragraph is the key to the entire article:

"What means the applause that greeted the treason of Phillips in Brooklyn? What is the world to understand from such an exhibition of approbation? Is this the Government of two people as different in our sentiments of right and wrong as we are in our institutions? When an impudent scoundrel, avowing himself "not a citizen," asserts that one of the States of the Confederacy is not a Government, it would pass unheeded, did it not meet the approbation and enlist the attention of a crowded audience from a sister State. Our Northern brethren, by such exhibitions of approbation, are fanning the flame of civil discord, which, in an unlooked-for hour, will burst forth into a consuming conflagration. We shall feed the now smouldering embers with every particle of fuel furnished by the Northern fanatics. As long as Conservatism sits silent, and listens coward-like to such treason, we shall inform our readers of public sentiment at the North, and if the information inflames, why, let the consequences fall upon the authors and abettors. It is folly to point Southern people to the Northern Press as evidence that Brown is execrated at the North. A few more such public meetings as that which applauded Phillips will satisfy the people of the South that the Union has served its purpose, that we are two different people, and that all efforts at continued good-feeling, under a common Government, are futile."

The Enquirer shuts its eyes, willfully and intentionally, to the explanations upon this very point with which we accompanied the publication of Mr. Phillips' lecture. We stated distinctly, and from our own personal knowledge of the fact, that the "applause" with which it was greeted indicated not the slightest sympathy with its denunciations of the Union or its indorsement of Brown's invasion of the peace and the rights of Virginia. Out of the three thousand people who heard him, we do not believe there were one hundred who assented to his opinions or concurred in his estimate of the State of Virginia or the Federal Government.

One thing the Enquirer cannot comprehend,—namely, that the people of the North can listen to sentiments which they detest without mobbing the speaker, or making their protest against his opinions a matter of violence and force. We listen to Wendell Phillips always with delight,—because he is one of the most finished and scholarly speakers the country has ever produced:—and yet our people are by no means blind to his sophisms and his misstatements, or to the absurd falsities of his logic, and the irrational character of his exhortations. We have learned to appreciate these vehement fulminations of Abolitionism at their proper value. We no longer fear a dissolution of the Union from every extravagant exaggeration of Anti-Slavery eloquence, nor have we supposed that Virginia could be indignant because we are not alarmed.

But the Enquirer declares its purpose to feed the smoldering embers of disaffection, by reprinting all these Abolitionist declamations,—and then, it adds, "if the information inflames, why let the consequences fall upon the authors and abettors." This is very extraordinary language. The Enquirer evidently imagines it to be a threat,—but it certainly cannot take effect at the North. Who will suffer first from the "inflammation" which the Virginia journalist expects to create? We should be very sorry to see Virginia do herself any serious harm, under the delusion that she will make us hopelessly unhappy thereby. We are sympathetic, it is true,—and should doubtless suffer in common with our sister State;—but it is much easier to endure another's "inflammation" than one's own,—and we should probably recover from the affliction long before the Old Dominion.

The Enquirer declares that "the South will not submit to a Union" in which such harangues can be listened to with more applause than hisses. Then the South will be very unwise. She will go further and fare very much worse. If there were nothing in the Union more annoying and dangerous than the harangues of Mr. Phillips, we should have little fear of its immediate dissolution. If the people of Virginia could only recover their self-possession, and lean upon their conscious strength sufficiently to listen to these performances as complacently as we of the North are in the habit of doing, we are confident they would soon learn to attach just as little importance to their fulminations.

An Historical Episode.—Mr. James A. McMasters, editor of the Freeman's Journal, endeavored, on Monday night, to set Christopher Columbus right in the eyes of the Catholic Library Association, of No. 809 Broadway. That body appears to have, for some time, harbored notions about the great man's conduct as unworthy of them as of him. Mr. McMasters has, it seems, removed the misunderstanding between "the parties," and the Catholic Library Association and Mr. Christopher Columbus are now on the best possible terms. It appeared from Mr. McMasters' statement, that the misconceptions of the Association were mainly due to the machinations of "an infidel of the Voltaire school" named Navarette, who was retained by the Spanish Government for the express purpose of blaspheming the illustrious Genoese. This miscreant, we learn, has been imitated and quoted by Humboldt and Washington Irving, who have charged the discoverer with having compared his discoveries "to the trick of breaking an egg, and thus making it stand upon its end," and of having had an intrigue with "the mother of his second son." We do not venture to obtrude our opinions into the arena in which a contest is raging between such famous disputants, and shall mildly confine ourselves to hoping that Columbus never did make the "odious comparison" which Mr. McMasters' so justly stigmatizes, and that his relations with the lady in question were in all respects legitimate, and the second son aforesaid born in lawful wedlock.

But there is one fact brought to light by Mr. McMasters towards the close of his discourse, over which we must give way to our emotions. "One of Columbus' crew was an Irishman!" In other words, in the forecastle of the Pinta there was an able-bodied seaman of Hibernian extraction. What this gentleman's home was, or how much he received a month, or how he relished the ship's stores, or what induced him to ship, or what was the general tenor of his observations to his brother seamen during that eventful voyage, Mr. McMasters does not mention. Nor does he inform us how he got at the momentous fact of this gentleman's presence on board. But there it is in its deep significance, and we leave to others the task of gainsaying, explaining, or interpreting it. We will only add that it does not in the least surprise us. We have yet to hear of the remarkable event of ancient or modern times at which an Irishman was not present, or of the remarkable man who was not of Irish descent on one side or other. If the Catholic Library Association wants to render history a service, it will request Mr. McMasters to endeavor to light upon some leading episode in the world's history in which no Irishman took part, or some spot of the earth's surface which an Irishman was not the first to explore, or some battle in which the victorious general was not a lineal descendant of a Milesian chieftain. His report would necessarily be brief, but if he made any such discoveries they would give him and No. 809 Broadway a world-wide fame.

The Iron Letter-Boxes for Lamp-Posts.—It is high time that this improvement was adopted for the better administration of the local mail service of this City. Philadelphia, whose letter-delivery does not bear comparison with ours, has several thousands of these boxes attached to lamp-posts, on the corners of streets, and the revenue of the Post-office Deparment is largely on the increase. Mr. Fowler is disposed to adopt the system the moment he is authorized to do so; and the question is one not of dollars and cents as regards the cost, but of an immense deficiency in the rightful revenue which private expresses divert from the Post-office, and the outrageous indifference to the rights of our citizens to a proper mail service. Another serious consideration is that the tin boxes containing letters, in corner groceries and rum holes, are, if the truth were known, not always respected by the proprietors. The opportunity is now offered for an improved City delivery, and it should be embraced at once, or else abandon the whole thing to private management. If the mail routes belong to the Government, the Government should occupy them and do its duty.

The Opera in New-York.

A PLEA FOR THE GERMAN SCHOOL.

New-York, Friday, Oct. 4, 1859.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

By several cards of the managers of the Academy of Music, we see that the public are promised this season, Mozart's "Magic Flute," pronounced by a great many to be, together with his "Idomenea," the greatest work the immortal master ever composed. Certainly it is the most complicated and difficult opera of Mozart, requiring no less than eighteen independent singers of the first class, if the opera is to be performed as it ought to be. The repertoire of the season has, until now, been exceedingly satiating, and it must be really refreshing to every one to have a chance now to hear some other composer's works besides Verdi and Donizetti. It is true, we have a new opera, the "Sicilian Vespers," but this is another work of Verdi, on the merits of which the critics are by no means agreed. We have often been astonished that our opera-going public did not get tired a long while ago of the works of the two composers, mostly written in a superficial and light style, wholly deficient in all that constitutes a really classic opera. If our critics and musical connoisseurs say our public have a bad taste—that they have not learned yet how to appreciate classic music—we regret to be obliged to say, we have to acknowledge this to a great extent. But whose fault is it, and what is the reason, we beg to ask, why we don't have anything but these superficial and light works? The managers of the Academy of Music give us Verdi and Donizetti, and sometimes we have the good luck to hear one of Bellini's operas. But that is certainly the most we can make out of them! There don't seem to be written for New-York any of the really grand operas; we mean to say, such as have never been performed in our great operatic metropolis as yet, and on the merits of which the critics of every country are unanimous. We have been for several years in the principal operatic cities of Europe, and know, by our own experience, that no manager would dare to offer a European public always the same operas of the same composers.

In Germany, for instance, where the repertoire is more complete than in any other country of the world, we heard, amongst others, the works of such immortal masters as Gluck, Spohr, Weber, Dittersdorf, Winter, Weigl, Marschuer, Sallier and Cherubini. We would take the liberty to ask the question, What is the reason we can't hear such masterpieces here? We always thought we heard the very best of music here, but have been grievously mistaken. In no way can the repertoire of our Academy of Music compare to that of the German Opera houses, or even Paris and London. In Dresden, for instance, we had the pleasure to hear Gluck's romantic opera, "Armide," and in Munich we were present at the performance of "Alceste," a grand tragic opera by the same master. Our people would be struck with the beauty and highly dramatic style of two such immortal operas of the great master Gluck, the precursor of Mozart. These two works, to which even the immortal "Don Giovanni" is hardly equal, abound in melodies of quite a peculiar and irresistible charm, and contain the most dramatic effects as well as the richest and most powerful orchestral treatment imaginable. The numerous double choruses are masterpieces in every respect. To give you an idea of the cast of these operas, the "Alceste" requires no less than four sopranos, two contraltos, and six basses, and the "Armide" is more powerfully cast yet. In other German cities we heard two classic comic operas by DITTERSDORF, "Lo Sposo burleto" and "Terno secco," comparing most favorably to the famous "Nozze di Figaro." This immortal composer, hardly known here, we are sorry to be obliged to say, was, like GLUCK, a precursor of MOZART too, and the father of the classic comic opera, having been born as early as 1739. His sacred oratorio, "Job," which we heard at Vienna, is no doubt one of the grandest and most sublime works of that kind. Certainly Germany is the country in which to hear classic music, and New-York has greatly to improve yet.

The managers of our Academy of Music vaunt themselves that their company is more complete in every detail at this time than it has ever been before. Besides this, the chorus and orchestra have of late been considerably increased, so as to enable them to give the public the most complicated and most difficult operas; and, what is more, they have a good corps de ballet at their disposal. What's the reason, then, we beg to ask once more, that we don't hear anything better than VERDI, DONIZETTI and other composers of their stamp? They may do very well for Italy and the provincial cities of our Union, but New-York, as a great centre of art, such as it now undoubtedly is, requires and has a right to demand something better—something of a more classic character.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 8.

Postmaster-Gen. HOLT has completed his calculations for the last fiscal year, and ascertains that his retrenchments exceed by a fraction the sum of $1,000,000. This is the result of the curtailment of the Mail Service throughout the country. Mr. HOLT sets down the sum at the round figure, reserving the fraction for future contingencies.

Secretary FLOYD has just completed his estimates for the ensuing fiscal year. They are less by $1,500,000 than those of last year, and $500,000 less than the appropriations for the actual year.

[FROM THE REPORTER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 8.

As the chief, if not the only, difficulty in the way of the consummation of the pending treaty between the United States and Mexico, is in relation to the proposed transit routes, several influential parties have submitted to both Governments a basis of compromise. It is, that whichever Government may have forces nearest any scenes of obstruction or disturbances, shall promptly interfere for that purpose—each with the privilege of entering the Territory of its neighbor; and that both, in case of emergency, should act unitedly. The assistance recently afforded by the Mexican troops from Matamoras to the people of Brownsville is stated as an example. Such a proposition, however, to be incorporated in the treaty, must come from the Liberal Government This, it is understood, is favorably regarded by our own.

There is no doubt that both the Governments of Great Britain and the United States are decidedly in earnest in presenting their respective positions or convictions of right in relation to the San Juan question, although not more so than they were in the Oregon question. But the latest foreign official advices do not justify any apprehension of serious difficulties between the two countries.

Captain PAINE, of the navy, is here, and dangerously ill.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

MEETING OF THE ALUMNI OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.—There was a large meeting of the Alumni of Columbia College, last evening, in the Lecture Room of the Historical Society Building. Rev. Dr. LEONARD opened the exercises with prayer. Rev. MANCIUS HUTTON, D. D., delivered the annual address. His theme was, "Man's Sovereignty; or, His Right Lordship over this World." He endeavored to show that man was the lord of creation, but that he was not its true sovereign unless his will was in subjection to that of his Creator. ISAAC LAWRENCE, Esq., treated the audience to a humorous poem. His happy hits upon College life met with a hearty response.

THE COST OF CURIOSITY.—JOHN WARD, an Irishman of a curious turn, attended at the St. Patrick's Cathedral on the day of the Bartlett-Oviedo marriage. He was standing by the open iron gate in Mott-street, when a sudden movement in the throng caused the gate to shut with great force upon his hand, the little finger of which was fractured. He was conveyed to the Hospital, where an amputation was performed, but soon the whole arm became inflamed, and, despite every attention, the patient gradually sank, and finally died on Tuesday morning. An inquest was held by Coroner SCHIRMER.

PROF. LOWE'S BALLOON.—The Crystal Palace grounds will be thrown open to the public this evening—the time of exhibition having been extended to 10 P. M. The tent is to be illuminated by a calcium light. Some thirty thousand feet of gas were used yesterday in inflating the balloon.

RUTGERS' INSTITUTE LECTURES.—WM. C. PRIME, Esq., author of Boat Life on the Nile and Tent Life in Egypt, delivers the third lecture in this course this evening. Subject—"Holy Crosse."

During the month of October, as above shown, medical and surgical services, vaccination and medicine were afforded gratuitously to 10,123 persons. The principal causes of death were phthisis and marasmus. The prevailing diseases chiefly affected the respiratory system. Among the most important were bronchitis and consumption.

Trouble on the U. S. Sloop-of-War Brooklyn.

A SAILOR BRUTALLY BEATEN—FATAL RESULT OF HIS INJURIES.

Monday the United States sloop-of-war Brooklyn set sail for the Gulf of Mexico, having on board Mr. MCLANE, United States Minister to Mexico. In the evening she returned to Quarantine, and Coroner HESLEWOOD was notified that a death had occurred on the vessel, the circumstances of which it would be necessary for him to investigate. It appeared that GEORGE RITTER, of Easton, one of the seamen, had become somewhat intoxicated on Sunday, and as he was inclined to be unruly, the ship's Corporal, CHAS. COOPER, was ordered to confine him. Some difficulty was found in executing this duty, and COOPER, it is alleged, finally gagged him by tying a stick across his mouth, and then drew him below feet foremost, his head striking heavily on each step. Monday RITTER was found dead. Drs. GUNN, HALSEY and RICHARDSON made the post-mortem examination, and seemed to be of the opinion that death was the result of violence. The Commander of the Brooklyn set COOPER ashore on the ferry company's dock, but he was observed and was arrested. The Brooklyn last evening again set sail for her destination.

Police Reports.

A HIGHWAYMAN.

Ex-Alderman Hiram Corwin, of the Second Ward, was asked to "stand and deliver" his gold watch and chain as he was coming out of a drinking saloon in Broadway, near Walker-street, about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Instead of complying, Mr. Corwin seized the highwayman and held him, despite his struggles, until Officer Barrett, of the Sixth Precinct, came up. The prisoner, who is a brawny fellow, gave the name of Claudius Verdi. He says he is a Frenchman, 32 years of age, and resides in Pearl-street. As he was unable to furnish bail in $1,000 to appear for trial on a charge of highway robbery, Justice OSBORN committed him to the Tombs.

ASSAULT UPON A COUNSELLOR.

An application for divorce was recently made by Mrs. Alexander McKenzie, whose husband is a prominent resident of the Fifteenth Ward. Testimony was taken before a Referee, and during an examination some remarks of Mr. Edward J. Glassey, counsel for Mrs. McKenzie, excited the indignation of the defendant, who struck the lawyer a blow in the face. For this he was cited to answer before Justice QUACKENBUSH, but after the matter had been partly investigated, Mr. John McKeon, counsel for Mr. McKenzie, excepted to the Magistrate's ruling, and had the case removed to another tribunal.

A BROKER IN TROUBLE.

Mr. Sala B. Fish, of No. 52 Clarkson-street, entered a complaint yesterday, before Justice QUACKENBUSH, charging Mr. C. G. Thompson, of No. 85 Nassau-street, with false pretences. The complainant alleges that he sold the defendant a promissory note for $30, drawn by P. Harwood Vernon, for which he agreed to pay $27 on delivery. This agreement he failed to keep, and Mr. Fish alleges that now he is unable to procure either the money or the note, and that Thompson's design is to defraud him. The latter was held to await examination.

SERVING AN INJUNCTION ON A LAWYER.

Charles Reinhardt, a practitioner at the Tombs, entered the Police Court yesterday morning, and, as is alleged, commenced abusing the officers, especially the Clerk of the Court, Mr. John Lalor, toward whom he made threatening demonstrations. Lalor responded by knocking Reinhardt down, and giving him a sound thrashing.

STABBED HIS ANTAGONIST.

Cornelius Sweeney, in an encounter with Thos. Spencer, of No. 234 West-street, on Monday night, drew a knife and thrust it into his antagonist's breast, inflicting a dangerous wound. Sweeney was apprehended and taken before Justice SEERS, where he admitted that he had wounded Spencer in self-defence. He was held in $1,000 bail to answer.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

AWARDS FOR DESIGNS OF NEW PLYMOUTH CHURCH.—The trustees of Plymouth Church have awarded the prizes for designs for the new church building as follows: first prize to CHARLES DUGGIN, No. 332 Broadway. This includes the superintendence of the erection of the building, which may be valued at $5,000. Second prize, $500, to J. K. HAMILTON, No. 35 Wall-street; third prize, $250, to ALEXANDER SAELZER and LAWRENCE B. WALK; fourth prize, $150, to JULIUS W. ADAMS. The Committee state that the plans of RICHARD M. HUNT and J. WREY MOULD could not be considered on account of their estimates so far exceeding those originally given out.

ANOTHER AGITATION.

A Crusade Against Tobacco—Denunciation of Churches for Not Rebuking the Sin of Raising and Using the Weed.

GEORGE TRASK TO REV. DR. WOODBRIDGE, OF HADLEY, MASS.

REVEREND SIR: In a late number of the Boston Recorder, you give the public to understand that you are no friend of tobacco—that Dr. WATERHOUSE and other doctors pronounce it a poison, injurious to health and virtue; and that you concur in this opinion—that you used the weed, and at length relinquished it, much to your advantage; but that on conversion you did not, like some converts, commence a tirade against it, or those who raise it; that you never took such strong grounds as Rev. GEORGE TRASK, the apostle of the new reformation, who, by strong and denunciatory language, makes the evil worse than it is, and involves himself and cause in ridicule and contempt.

Such, Doctor, is the import of your article when stripped of its disingenuous guise, and couched in plain English, such as honest men should use.

With reverence, I thank God, "whose I am, and whom I serve" in this cause, that by this attack you furnish me with an occasion to address you on the sinful business of raising tobacco. Loathsome crop! A crop now loading the Connecticut Valley with disgrace, and surrounding you, in your old age, with its poisonous stench.

The morality of raising tobacco depends upon the morality of using it. If it is right to use it, it is right to raise it. If it is wrong to use it, it is wrong to raise it. Tobacco you and other doctors call poison. A poison does not assimilate with the processes of nature; a poison is anti-vital—it injures health and abridges life. Such is the action of tobacco. Physicians tell us that twenty thousand or more in our land are killed by it every year. German physicians tell us that of deaths of men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five, one-half originate from this source. Dr. TWICHELL tells us that a majority of those who fall dead by heart-complaint, so called, are killed by it! I can name two who have fallen by it rather recently in New-England, if the statements of friends are reliable evidence. You tell us that you were once a victim to it in two forms. I rejoice, my brother, that you abandoned it; had you not, we poor reformers should have had one orb less to shine on our darkness; one Doctor of Divinity less as a hold-back to keep us from converting the world with too much haste. I know you dispose of this change in your habits with an air of nonchalance, but really, Doctor, I think it a signal act in your life, if not the brightest feather in your cap.

I have written much to show that the common use of this narcotic is a sin; a sin, because it is a violation of the laws of life, laws as sacred and obligatory as the laws of Paradise or of the decalogue.

I refer to the sin of using tobacco, that I may dwell on the sin of raising it. To distil and use alchohol as a beverage is wrong, because to use it in this form is wrong. As we reason concerning alcohol, so we reason concerning tobacco; if it is wrong to put the one to our neighbor's mouth, so it is wrong to put the other to his mouth—the principle is the same.

But it is needless to argue the point here, for where is there a man or a boy in your valley who may not know that it is wrong habitually to use this poison? If you have seen any such, they need a candle at noon-day. Do you say, my brother, that it is no sin to use this poison? Impossible! Your intellect is perspicacious; you see things which we common ministers cannot see, even with microscopic aid. Indeed, Doctor, I understand you to imply that you think it a sin. You say, with other distinguished men, that the use of this poison injures health and virtue. What is this but sin? When a man slashes in upon health and virtue day and night, does he not trample on the laws of nature, and sin with a high hand? I am glad, therefore, that on this point we harmonize, for I know that when Dr. WOODBRIDGE thinks as I think that I must be right. Hence I take courage, and, God helping me, I will assail this abomination in still stronger language.

2. I come now, my brother, to your anti-tobacco conversion. You give us to infer that you were an amiable convert; you did not, on relinquishing the weed, make war on it, or on those who raised it, as some are now doing. Well, Doctor, there is a difference in converts. Some are noisy and others are still-born. The old prophets were rather noisy among the hill-tops of Palestine. Paul was rather noisy—Agrippa thought him mad, and he made quite an uproar on Mars Hill. Some, on the contrary, are silent about their conversion; they give the ungodly little trouble, and themselves still less; they aim to get a nice place in the kingdom, and from their niche of repose consign outsiders to the "tomb of the Capulets," where you consign tobacco. This, my brother, is an easy way of ridding the world of the apostacy and all its curses. What if God's people, with a single dash of the pen, should consign Slavery, war and all Pagan nations to "the tomb of the Capulets"—would this be carrying out God's eternal purposes of love? Ah, my brother, is this the way you treat an evil which is bringing death on your churches and ruining millions?

I call attention to the great staple in your valley. You have lived there fifty years, more or less, a teacher of morals and virtue. Fifty years ago your valley was not degraded by this crop as an article of commerce. Not a deacon had perjured his soul by pretending that he raised tobacco in order to give more to Foreign Missions! Not a clergyman had bowed the knee to this image; it had not become your River-God? But how is it now? As the stranger passes through your valley he sees this crop on the right and on the left, and the richest lands desecrated by this abomination. He sees tobacco hard by the house of God, and well-nigh watered by the droppings of the sanctuary. Worshippers talk about it in sheds and vestibules—talk about it by the way, and teach it diligently to their children.

This crop has gone on crescit eundo, and become what it is during your ministry, and to-day you are not like the angel of the Apocalypse standing in the midst of the sun! You are not surrounded by converts, as the drops of morning dew, for as the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so are tobacco crops round about you. Newspapers say that the single town of Hadley will raise this year one hundred and fifty tons of tobacco! Your valley will have the credit of raising over seven million pounds. Other institutions have risen near you, it is true; Amherst College and Mount Holyoke Seminary, beautiful for situation. Amherst may annually send out a large class, but your poisonous leaf may kill a class incomparably larger! Holyoke may annually furnish a class of noble wives, but seven million pounds of Connecticut leaf, saturating the bodies of a hundred thousand husbands, may place in the grave ten times as many of equal loveliness.

The French have a handsome institution on the banks of the Seine. There poor wretches, maimed and mangled in battle, are made comfortable. Ye WILLISTONS! ye LAWRENCES! names we love, build an institution on the banks of the Connecticut for poor invalids, made such by Spanish cigars, so-called, furnished by the valley your purses adorn!

"Satan," says Dr. HARRIS, "has no agent by which he destroys so many young men, soul and body, as by tobacco." Satan, Doctor, is a better general than any of us. He cares but little for your colleagues, male or female, if you will allow him to use your fat valley to poison God's children by thousands, and emasculate the nation. In scorn he throws this sword into the scale of battle, and laughs at mighty Amherst and Mount Holyoke with a better grace than you, a servant of God, laugh at this struggling reform.

Converts, my brother, are sometimes injured by the soil on which they reside. We have been differently located. I never lived under the avails of this culture. But had I lived where you live I might have been as silent a convert as you, and held my peace 28 years respecting the sin of raising tobacco.

I know not how much sinister motives have had to do with silencing your pulpit—that I leave with God. But pulpits in your valley, with few exceptions, dare not rebuke this abomination. Some ministers are timid, some are uninformed, some have no conscience, and have said, both by words and actions, "We don't care how much tobacco our people raise if they raise our salary." I am glad to add that here and there one has assailed this shameless nuisance, and shown himself a man. You may think the pulpit too holy to rebuke this sin, but the late Dr. EDWARDS (authority with you) has said, "Tobacco is a crying sin," and little will be done against it till ministers and pulpits do their duty." The late Dr. WOODS expressed the same opinion. Dr. HUMPHREY and Dr. HITCHCOCK have both said that the immorality of distilling rum and raising tobacco are the same.

The tobacco crop has been a blight on things lovely around you. Christian gentlemen traveling through your noble valley, see temples of God and tobacco-fields, all mingled in the landscape, and cry Shame!

The temperance lecturer is appalled as he sees this ally of King Alcohol stretching over ten-acre lots! He has small audiences and dead meetings; and he feels that a temperance meeting among tobacco-growers is like a temperance meeting at Warehouse Point, among the vats, fumes and fires of distillers!

3. You give the public to understand, Doctor, that I, by strong denunciatory language, make the evil worse than it is, and bring ridicule and contempt on myself and cause. A brick-bat was once hurled at a poor reformer's head; he held up the missile, and mildly said to his audience, "This argument is hard, but not convincing." The application is not difficult.

My brother, you are a master in Israel, but you do not know whereof you affirm. You quote nothing I have said or done; hence, to avoid further misrepresentations, I will state that I take no stronger ground than this: I tell tobacco-users that their habit is sinful; I show them that it is sinful, and beseech them to renounce it; and multitudes do, and bless God for having done it. I tell tobacco-growers that their business destroys the soil, destroys their fellow-men, and their own Christian character. This is its whole tendency. I tell them that they stand at the head of the enormous evil, and that God holds them accountable for the miseries their crops inflict.

This poison is used over a population of two hundred millions! Whether it is a greater evil than alcohol, war or pestilence, I am not ambitious to decide. The man is yet unborn who shall take its dimensions and wake the people of God to any just conceptions of it.

Such, Doctor, are my views. By advocating them far and near—by getting others to advocate them—preachers, lecturers and editors of noble bearing—I have accomplished something. Attention is aroused.

I have for this cause forsaken all. One portion of my salary has been promptly paid—I mean persecutions. Hence, you will pardon me if, with Paul, "I magnify mine office, and boast myself a little." Indeed, the "ridicule and contempt" which invests this cause, as you insinuate, compels me to say, God has blessed my labors. Thousands of professional men have dropped this poison, and what is strange, not a few doctors of divinity! Children and youth by thousands have been addressed and given the pledge. "There is not a stage, a car, a church in New-England, that may not be a cleanlier thing to-day in consequence of this reform." Says a doctor of divinity, "The agitation of this subject is worth ten times all it has cost." Says another doctor of divinity, "If six clergymen, with a salary of a thousand dollars each, had done what has been done, the Church would have thought this cause a most important one."

In view of the greatness of this evil, and the pitiable feebleness of my means, I wonder that anything but "ridicule" attends my name. My agency seems as ridiculous as the idea of killing Goliath of Gath by a little stone from the brook, or the idea of demolishing Jericho by rams' horns.

I wonder God takes feeble things to confound the mighty. I wonder He did not forestall the gigantic curse which has come on your valley, by making you the Anti-Tobacco Apostle, as in derision you call me. You were popular—you had not incurred odium by hard knocks in other reforms—and, what is more, you had a Doctorate to protect you from the shafts of ridicule. Hence, had God selected you, there had been, in human view, some correspondence between means and ends. Adieu, Doctor, for the present—we part here. Yours, truly, GEO. TRASK.

FITCHBURGH, Mass.

A Million of Muskets for Garibaldi.

MEETING OF THE ITALIANS.

In obedience to a call, published in the TIMES, for a meeting of the resident Italians to take measures in reference to assisting GARIBALDI in his efforts to obtain a million of muskets, a few persons assembled last evening in the Stuyvesant Institute. The meeting was called to order by Gen. J. AVEZZANA. He regretted that so small a portion of the twenty thousand Italians in New-York City had responded to the call of their native land, and hoped that their countrymen at home displayed more earnestness in behalf of GARIBALDI. He then introduced Prof. ACHILLE MAGNI.

Prof. MAGNI read a short address, in which he reviewed the history of Italy since 1848. The account of the wrongs inflicted upon that country by Austria called forth a loud expression of sympathy from the audience. He closed with an appeal to all the Italians to unite in rescuing their "poor Gen. GARIBALDI."

Mr. NESTORE CORRADI followed in the same strain. He had little to add to the eloquent remarks of Prof. MAGNI, but he could not help saying a word in behalf of Gen. GARIBALDI. He felt sure that if every man would contribute liberally, Italy would be free. He then read an original poem, the substance of which was that Venice would yet resume her position as the Queen of the Sea. This was received with great applause, and a vote of thanks was tendered to him for his effort. The President then proposed the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The present condition of Italy in general, and of the Central Italian Confederacy in particular, demands our attention; and,

Whereas, It is the duty of every citizen to help and defend his country, especially in the days when its independence and sovereignty are in danger; therefore,

Resolved, That this meeting do highly praise the proposal of Gen. GARIBALDI to collect funds sufficient for the purchase of a million muskets, and that it promises him their hearty coöperation.

Resolved, That a subscription be started for this purpose.

Resolved, That we make an appeal to the patriotism of the Italians in America, to take at heart the condition of their native land, and to contribute to the funds of Gen. GARIBALDI.

Resolved, That we address a friendly and brotherly word to all the noble and generous souls who befriend and support the inviolable principles of civil and religious liberty for all people, and that they be requested to coöperate in the redemption of Italy.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be instructed to carry into execution, with the utmost dispatch, the resolutions passed at this meeting.

Resolved, That the Permanent Committee increase their number, if it be deemed necessary.

Resolved, That the thanks of the meeting be tendered to Mr. GAOSA for his kindness in presenting them with a portrait of Gen. GARIBALDI, and that the same be disposed of by lot among the subscribers to the fund before mentioned.

Considerable discussion ensued upon the appointment by the Chair of an Executive Committee, and the meeting adjourned without coming to any definite arrangement.

Naval Apprentices.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A communication in the TIMES, of Saturday (signed by a formidable array of initials,) suggests various improvements in the existing Naval Apprentice System. These suggestions may be judicious, as far as they go, and in the main practicable, but they lack one important element of success, if the object be to create for the Navy an improved class of seamen. To do this, it is necessary to overcome the aristocratic prejudice, so firmly rooted in the mind of Navy Officers, that, between the officer and the man, there is a "great gulf fixed." Stimulate the ambition of boys on the forecastle, by the prospect of merit carrying them aft to the quarter-deck, and the classes of officers and seamen will be rendered more efficient. The details of a system, applicable to the requirements of apprentices thus situated, do not fall within the scope of a brief newspaper article. There is no difficulty, however, in preparing boys on the forecastle for the highest lineal ranks, under a properly regulated plan, other than the strong aversion of officers themselves to the admission of the working classes into their exclusive circle.

Let Congress declare that after a certain date all appointments of midshipmen shall be made from the most meritorious of apprentices, who have served two years at sea, at the same selecting apprentices from Congressional Districts, as midshipmen are now selected, and a system will very soon be matured that would do more for the efficiency of the Navy than any act of legislation on the statute books.

JAIL DELIVERY IN MONROE COUNTY.—The Rochester Democrat, Nov. 7, reports the escape of thirteen prisoners from Monroe County jail. The prisoners seized the jailor, Mr. BASCOM, by the throat, wrenched his keys from him, and flung him violently into a closet, when the door was closed upon him and fastened outside by means of a hasp and staple attached to it. All this was done in much less time than it has taken us to relate it, and Mr. BASCOM had no opportunity to raise an alarm. After he was shut up his utmost efforts were unavailing to make himself heard, as the door is a very heavy one, made of two thicknesses of plank. Mrs. BASCOM, therefore, sat in the office while the struggle went on, perfectly unconscious of anything wrong. The ringleader's (SMITH) next step was to ascertain whether the office was clear, and finding that it contained nobody but the lady, he immediately liberated from their cells those of the prisoners who proposed to join in the flight, and Mrs. BASCOM was presently astonished by the appearance of the whole gang at the iron door, demanding to be let out.

R. L. Davenport, son of Lewis Davenport, of Holyoke, Mass., suddenly disappeared from Westfield, about three years ago, and nothing was known of his whereabouts. A letter has just been received by his father, announcing his death at Kurrachee in the Scinde, India. It seems he joined an artillery company of the English army in India, and survived the late war to die a natural death.

Coughs and Colds! Coughs and Colds!

SEASONABLE ADVICE.

Let no one neglect a cold or a slight cough. Thousands doing so have had one cold added to another, until the mucus membrane lining the air passages has become excessively irritated, and even permanently thickened, and soon chronic cough, chronic pneumonia, and consumption successively gallop along. The best time to cure all this is when it begins. If you are so fortunate as to possess a case of HUMPHREY'S SPECIFIC HOMEOPATHIC REMEDIES, and if you do not you ought to, at once take a COUGH PILL, and then two or three pills per day, with care as to renewed exposure, will bring you all right in a day or two.

If your cough has got further along, then more care and more patience is necessary for a cure, though it lays in the same direction. Our advice is to keep the feet warm, the head cool, and take HUMPHREY'S HOMEOPATHIC COUGH PILLS.

Price 25 cents per box, with directions; six boxes $1.

N. B.—A full set of HUMPHREY'S HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS, with book of directions and twenty Remedies, in large eight-drachm vials, and morocco case, $5; do. in plain case, $4; family case of 15 boxes and book, $2.

The Remedies by the single box or full case, sent to any address by mail or express, free of charge, on receipt of the price. Address

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT BOOKS for the subscription of $250,000 as additional stock to the MECHANICS' BANK of Missouri, at St. Louis, will be opened at the Bank of America, in this City, on and after Monday, the 24th inst.

The authorized capital of this Bank is $1,500,000, of which $757,425 has been taken and paid up by the citizens of Missouri. This Bank has been in operation over two years—was the only Bank west of the Mississippi that did not suspend specie payments in 1857. Regular half-yearly dividends of five per cent. have been declared, with an accumulated surplus of $94,445. The charter is liberal in its provisions, has not the personal liability clause, and has 25 years to run. St. Louis is considered one of the safest and best points in the West for Banking operations. But few better opportunities for investment are offered. The attention of capitalists and others is called to the subject. Ten per cent. will be required to be paid at the time of subscribing, the residue within the next ensuing year, as the Directors may call on due notice, but may all be paid up at the time, at the option of the subscriber. Pro rata dividends will be paid to subscribers from the day of payment. Dividends to Eastern stockholders will be paid in New-York. Persons desiring other and further information, will obtain the same by applying at the Bank of America.

J. W. WILLS, President.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 22, 1859.

They bear Eight per Cent. interest, payable annually on the 1st of July at the American Exchange Bank, in this City, and have 20 years to run from Oct. 15, 1857. The interest has always been promptly paid, and that which matures the 1st of July, 1860, has already been assessed by the County Court and the tax books are in the hands of the collector Fulton County has also created a sinking fund for the redemption of these Bonds, and levied a half-mill tax on the whole taxable property of the county, now over $9,000,000. This county has 35,000 population, and is one of the wealthiest and most enterprising in the State of Illinois. Any further information desired, can be had upon application to the undersigned. No safer security has ever been offered upon this market. GEO. T. M. DAVIS, No. 47 Exchange-place.

NOTICE.—THE INTEREST DUE ON THE FIRST Mortgage Bonds, issued by the La Crosse and Milwaukee Railroad Company, due Nov. 1, 1859, will not be paid on that day.

The earnings of the road during the present year have been fifty per cent. less than estimated or anticipated, while the necessary expenses of operating and maintaining the road, with the additional expense of right of way, which became absolutely necessary to run the road, have been such as to compel me to ask indulgence, authorized by the terms of the mortgage (sixty days) which, I trust, will be time enough for the earnings of the road to be sufficient to pay said interest. Notice of the time and place of payment will be duly published.

S. CHAMBERLAIN,
Mortgagee in Possession.

THE VIRGINIA REBELLION.

TRIAL OF THE CONSPIRATORS.

Conviction of Copeland—Case of Cook Submitted to the Grand Jury—Stevens to be tried in the Federal Courts.

FURTHER DOCUMENTARY LIGHTS.

CHARLESTOWN, Va., Tuesday, Nov. 8.

The excitement in regard to the trial of the Harper's Ferry conspirators still continues, and fair progress is being made by the Court in the disposal of cases. The case of COPELAND, the free negro, was brought to a close on Saturday afternoon, the Jury finding a verdict of not guilty of treason, as charged on the first count of the indictment, he not being recognized as a citizen; and guilty of conspiracy with slaves to rebel, and of murder, as charged in the second and third counts. The case was ably argued by ANDREW HUNTER, Esq., on behalf of the State. The prisoner was defended by GEORGE SENNOTT, of Boston, who labored with much zeal for his client. A bill of exceptions, and a motion for arrest of judgment, were entered by the prisoner's counsel, and will be disposed of to-morrow morning.

The Court assembled at 10 o'clock on Monday, and was called to order by Judge PARKER. The Grand Jury was then sworn and immediately proceeded to their room, to consider the case of Capt. COOK. A number of witnesses were summoned, and the Jury were absent about two hours. On the reassembling of the Court, Mr. HARDING, the prosecuting attorney, stated that as a number of the witnesses in the case of COOK, who would not be in the Stephens case, were present, he would, if agreeable to the counsel on the other side, move to take up the case of COOK first.

THOMAS C. GREEN, Esq., one of the Counsel for COOK, said that as counsel he had not yet had time to read the indictment, and had not yet decided what plea to enter to the charge. He was unable to proceed in the case, and would prefer that the Commonwealth should proceed with the case of STEPHENS, which would allow them time to prepare for the case of COOK.

A. D. STEPHENS was accordingly brought into Court and placed upon a mattress. He looks pale and haggard—his abstinence from food and the large quantity of medicine taken by him having had a decided effect. He bears up under his wounds with much fortitude and is seldom heard to murmur. His counsel, Mr. SENNOTT (who had endeavored to have his trial moved to an adjoining county but was refused) appeared, and the impanneling of the jury was proceeded with. After a considerable number of jurymen had been obtained, Mr. HUNTER arose and said, that he had just received a dispatch which would probably interfere with the further proceedings in impanneling a jury. He then read the following telegraphic dispatch from GOV. WISE:

RICHMOND, Nov. 7.

ANDREW HUNTER—Dear Sir: I think you had better bring COOK and hand STEPHENS over to the Federal authorities. Respectfully, H. A. WISE.

Mr. HUNTER states that he has for several days been in correspondence with Governor WISE, and had in his possession a number of facts important to the development of this case, which were unknown to the public, and which would for the present remain so. He had, since his last letter to the Governor, come into possession of other facts which pointed to STEPHENS as the most available party to be handed over to the Federal authorities, as he felt assured that enough would be ascertained to result in bringing before the Federal bar, a number of the prominent Abolition fanatics in the North.

Mr. Harding objected to these proceedings, and insisted that the case should be proceeded with. He was not in league with Governor Wise or any one else, and was not feed by any one. He would only receive as a compensation for his arduous labors the small pittance allowed by the Circuit Court.

Mr. SENNOTT remarked that he had not consulted with his client, and as the jury had partly been chosen he would not consent that the State should hand the prisoner over to the Government. For what purpose it was to be done was known to Gov. WISE, and had been foreshadowed by the remarks of Mr. HUNTER. If time had been allowed him the trouble had in impanneling the jury would have been dispensed with. Mr. HUNTER then would proceed immediately with the case of STEPHENS, and hand the prisoner, HAZLITT, who has not yet been indicted, to the Federal Court. It was immaterial to him whether STEPHENS would prefer a trial or not.

Mr. SENNOTT then asked a delay of a moment for consultation with STEPHENS, after which he announced that the prisoner accepted the offer of the State to hand him over to the Federal authority, and would, therefore, prefer to be remanded to jail.

Mr. HARDING desired the Clerk to enter his earnest protest against the whole proceedings. He considered the proceedings wrong, and wished it to be shown on the docket.

Judge PARKER (to the Clerk)—Do no such thing. I wish no such protest entered on the docket of this Court.

The prisoner was then handed over to United States Marshal MARTIN, and lodged in jail, where he will remain until the term of the Federal Court at Staunton, which will not meet for some time.

The Jury was then discharged, and a large number of freeholders of the Court, summoned to appear to-morrow morning, at 9 o'clock, when the case of COOK will be taken up. It will excite a large degree of interest. COOK will be defended by J. E. MACDONALD, Attorney-General, and Mr. VOORHIES, District-Attorney, of Indiana, and Messrs. LAWSON BOTTS and THOS. C. GREEN, of our own Bar. The prosecution will be conducted by ANDREW HUNTER, Esq. The prisoner seems to be in fine spirits, and is not without hopes of a verdict in his favor. Gov. WILLARD and Mr. CROWLEY, his brothers-in-law, will be present during the entire trial.

TUESDAY MORNING.

COOK's trial commenced this morning. The opening speech was made by Mr. HARDING. COOK's confession was read in open Court by ANDREW HUNTER. A jury was then impanneled.

ARREST OF AN ALLEGED INSURGENT IN TENNESSEE.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Tuesday, Nov. 8.

W. R. PALMER, an alleged insurgent, has been arrested on a requisition from Gov. WISE.

NOTES FROM CHARLESTOWN.

GEORGE SENNOTT, the lawyer sent from Boston to defend the balance of BROWN's fellow prisoners, creates quite a sensation. He pitches in at every point with such freedom and pertinacity as completely to shock the dignity and decorum of the Virginia Court. In defending SHIELDS GREEN, one of the negroes, he picked all sorts of flaws in the indictment, and was so irreverent generally that the Court and the spectators began to feel wolfish, and it was with difficulty they kept their chivalrous hands off him.

Mr. BROCKETT, a Boston artist, arrived at Charlestown on Wednesday, to procure a likeness of BROWN and a measurement of his head, to aid in making a bust, for which he has received a commission, but he found it difficult to obtain access to BROWN on account of the new excitement raised by SENNOTT, and it is doubtful whether he will be allowed to take BROWN's daguerreotype. The idea of a statue to the man who has plotted treason against Virginia does not suit their idea of the fitness of things.

BROWN's wounds, except the cut on the back of his head, are now all healed, and the scars are scarcely visible. He attributes his rapid recovery to his abstemious habits through life. He occupies a room in jail with STEVENS, whose recovery is still doubtful. BROWN says that he is preaching, even in jail, with great effect, upon the enormities of Slavery, and with arguments that everybody fails to answer. His friends say, with regret, that in many of his recent conversations, he has given stronger reason for a belief that he is insane than ever before.

BROWN'S LEGAL ADVISERS.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Nov. 8.

GEORGE H. HOYT, who acted as junior counsel for Old John BROWN at Charlestown, returns to Virginia to-morrow, to assist his client in the disposal of his personal effects. He proposes to remain at Charlestown until after BROWN's execution.

Mr. HOYT's first visit was in the capacity of messenger, to obtain the services of MONTGOMERY BLAIR, to whom he carried letters of recommendation. Mr. BLAIR was unable to assume the duties of counsel for BROWN, but was instrumental in securing the services of Mr. CHILTON, who subsequently acted so effectively in the case.

It was not until after Mr. HOYT had ascertained that the services of Mr. BLAIR could not be obtained, that he resolved to act as assistant counsel for BROWN.

BROWN'S LOVE OF JUSTICE.

Rev. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, of Boston, made the Harper's Ferry business the topic of his sermon last Sunday; availing himself of the text, (Mark, vi., 20,) "And Herod feared John, knowing he was a just man." In the course of his remarks, he related the following anecdote, illustrative of BROWN's strict and impartial sense of justice: "Some years ago, when living in Western Pennsylvania, or on the Ohio Reserve, he found a man whom he believed a horse-thief. He arrested him and took him to jail. The man was convicted and sent to prison. But while he was in prison JOHN BROWN furnished the man's family with provision and clothing. The man had committed a crime, and BROWN's sense of justice required that he should be punished. His wife and children had not; and BROWN's sense of justice would not allow them to be punished for another's fault. The man who told this story to my brother-in-law, is now deputy-sheriff in Crawford County, and was at that time a boy in BROWN's family, and was himself sent to town to buy flour, &c., and carry it to the house of the convict."

THE VIRGINIA LAW OF TREASON.

The following article appears in the Richmond Enquirer (Gov. WISE's organ) of Monday:

"The sympathy that has been enlisted for the Charlestown prisoners, has overstepped the bounds of wise discretion, and, in assailing the State of Virginia, her people and executive, has defeated its object.

The trial has been denounced as begun too soon, and conducted with 'indecent haste.' What is the great fundamental principle of criminal prosecutions' as embodied in the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights of the several States of this Union? 'A SPEEDY TRIAL BY AN IMPARTIAL JURY' is demanded by the Bills of Rights of twenty-five States in the American Union—and the Amendment of the Federal Constitution also provides, in the words of GEORGE MASON's Bill of Rights, for a 'SPEEDY TRIAL.' The universal presumption of innocence on the part of the accused demands a 'speedy trial'—and, until the mawkish sympathy recently manufactured at the North began its preaching of 'indecent haste,' a 'speedy trial' was esteemed the guaranteed right of the accused, to have denied which would have been in violation of our own Bill of Rights.

Fanatical love for the criminal, now designates a 'speedy trial' as conducted with 'indecent haste,' and endeavors to compromise the dignity and justice of Virginia with insinuations against her courts of justice. Such conduct is not calculated to allay the excited feelings of Virginia, or to temper justice with mercy; nor does such sentiments and conduct tend to reconcile an injured people with the Union. It serves no good end—either to the prisoners, the country, nor the Northern people—and the sooner returning reason asserts her sway the better for all, for the prisoner, the Government and the people.

JOHN BROWN has had his just rights, 'speedy trial by an impartial jury;' he has had the 'nature and cause of his accusation' explained to him; he has been 'confronted with his accusers and witnesses;' he has had all the 'evidence in his favor' that he desired. By the 'unanimous consent of an impartial jury' he has been 'found guilty;' he was not 'compelled to give evidence against himself;' nor was his voluntary confession used upon his trial; but he will be 'deprived of his life by the law of the land and the judgment of his peers.'

Thus every right secured 'in criminal prosecutions' by our 'Bill of Rights' has been freely and fully extended to the prisoner; and that prisoner has expressed his satisfaction with the trial and all its incidents.

Shall John Brown be pardoned? The law of Virginia, chap. 17, section 18, provides—

The Governor shall not grant a pardon in any case before conviction, nor to any person convicted of treason against the Commonwealth, except with the consent of the General Assembly, declared by joint resolution. Neither shall he grant a reprieve to any person convicted of treason for a longer period than until the end of the session of the General Assembly, during which it may be granted, or, than until the end of the succeeding session, when it is granted during the recess.

Here, then, is an end to all pardon by the Executive. He has not the power to pardon JOHN BROWN, convicted of treason.

He has not the power to reprieve longer than the end of the approaching session.

If JOHN BROWN is sane he ought not to be pardoned—if insane he ought not to be punished.

The Virginia Code, chapter 208, sections 16, 17 and 18, sets forth the law as follows:

16. No person shall, while he is insane, be tried for a criminal offence.

17. If a Superior Court, to which an examing Court remands a person for trial, see reasonable ground to doubt his sanity at the time at which, but for such doubt, he would be tried, it shall suspend the trial, until the jury inquire into the fact as to such insanity. Such jury shall be impanneled at its bar. If the jury find the accused to be sane at the time of their verdict, they shall make no other inquiry, and the trial in chief shall proceed. If they find that he is insane, they shall inquire whether or no he was so at the time of the alleged offence. If they find that he was so at that time, the Court may dismiss the prosecution, and either discharge him, or, to prevent his doing mischief, remand him to jail, and order him to be removed thence to one of the lunatic asylums of the State. If they find that he was not so, at that time, the Court shall commit him to jail, or order him to be confined in one of said asylums, until he is so restored that he can be put upon his trial.

18. If, after conviction, and before sentence of any person, the Court see reasonable ground to doubt his insanity, it may impannel a jury to inquire into the fact of his sanity, and sentence him, or commit him to jail, or to a lunatic asylum, according as the jury may find him to be insane or sane.

Thus by the laws of Virginia an insane man cannot be tried; the plea of insanity arrests the trial for guilt, and the Jury must first ascertain the fact of sanity. Should the insanity not be discovered until after "conviction and before sentenced," the 18th section provides the relief. But, should sentence have been passed, relief may still be had, by a postponement of the execution by the Executive, until the question of sanity is definitely ascertained.

If JOHN BROWN, in the opinion of any persons, be not sane, we hope they will not fail to institute proceedings for the trial of the fact of sanity. If those persons who now profess to believe him insane are sincere, they will not fail to institute the necessary proceedings. All hopes of Executive clemency should be abandoned, for, as we have shown, the Executive, if he had the disposition, has not the power."

FEARS OF THE RESCUE OF BROWN.

The Cincinnati Gazette publishes the following letter from its correspondent at Charlestown, Va.;

"Let me state the particular evidences of present fear. Every train that passes, although it be not searched by men passing through, is inquired of. The conductor is put through an examination—to what effect I could not learn—so that if any suspicious characters are abroad they may be detected. Every man who stays at the station is placed under surveillance, and egress from the hotel generally results in arrest. Last week has been prolific in arrests; they included a Presbyterian clergyman, who, on his way to synod, stopped over to avoid traveling the whole night; also a gentleman from Kansas, whose name I could not learn, who incautiously stated that he knew BROWN; a Mr. BARTLETT, from Louisville, who en route for the East allowed his curiosity to induce him to look at the water-tank, beside several others.

This is not all. The brave Mr. WASHINGTON, the nearest relative living of the 'Father of his Country,' does not sleep at home at night, lest his slaves should murder him or his family, and Mr. ALENTADT and others followed his example. This is said to be explained by the fact, that suspicion has been aroused, that not all of the people of Harper's Ferry were innocent of knowledge of the proposition of BROWN to free the slaves of the Old Dominion. Upon this point considerable silence is attempted, but when the insurgent chiefs are disposed of, there will be considerable of a stir among the citizens here. Certain it is that at least the negro of WASHINGTON, who is claimed to have been drowned as he was returning to his enslaver, was doing nothing of the sort. He was well armed, had been at the rifle works, and like the unfortunate white man, whose cruel butchery I recounted in my last, he was escaping when overcome by the waters.

The visit of Gov. WILLARD, of Indiana, and his political allies, United States District-Attorney VOORHIES, and Attorney-General MCDONALD, is much canvassed in connection with the fate of COOK. This man finds but few friends. He is regarded as a bad man, who, having set a machine in motion, had not the courage to wait the result of its working. Fears are generally expressed that he will escape, and yet there is a settled conviction that his is the primal guilt. From conversation with several who have watched the progress of the entire affair, I am inclined to think that COOK will be used as State's evidence."

THE RICHMOND ARMORY IN DANGER.

The Richmond Examiner cherishes an apprehension that an attempt will be made to seize the Armory in that city, and entreats Gov. WISE to strengthen its defenses. The Examiner describes the condition of affairs as follows:

"The old saying, that 'the longer we live the more we learn,' is forcibly exemplified in the case of the Armory in this city. It would be pleasurable, indeed, if increased knowledge concerning it gave us increased confidence in it as a refugium in the hour of danger, but 'tis unfortunately true that each new development shows that it is little better than 'a mockery, a delusion and a snarl.'

We have recounted several defects and deficiencies, but the cry is 'still they come,' and thickly.

We were assured, on Friday last, by a commissioned officer in this city, that when he went to the Armory, on the night preceding his departure for Harper's Ferry, with an order from the Governor for 1,200 rounds of ammunition, there was not that quantity on hand for him, and he had to wait until cartridges were put up by a number of hands who were put to work on them; and on Saturday we were assured, by another commissioned officer, who also went to the Armory on the night before his departure for Harper's Ferry, that the cartridges which he took with him were made that night, and not only that, but that the balls were moulded that night by the hands above mentioned; and that there being no percussion caps in the Armory, he had to send a person to wake up from his bed Mr. SINTON, the hardware merchant on Main-street, and procure percussion caps from him; and we have also heard that another officer, when he was going to Harper's Ferry, supplied his company with caps from his own store. Again: We heard on Friday that an order has been issued from the Adjutant-General's Office, to the officers of the Armory, not to issue, in future, any but flint-lock muskets. If any such order has been issued, it is because there are but few good arms in store, or because the Adjutant-General wants to make an issue with the military.

Now, this is a most pitiful state of things; it is shameful, and we hardly think he will be going too far when we say it is highly culpable—in fact, it shows that all the talk about our being well prepared to meet any emergency is downright humbug."

MORE INSURRECTION.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN KENTUCKY—REPORTED DISCOVERY OF A SECRET INSURRECTIONARY MOVEMENT.

From the Cincinnati Daily Times, Nov. 4.

Considerable excitement, we learn from reliable authority, exists in a portion of Kentucky, relative to the supposed detection of a secret organization having, for its object a slave insurrection. The facts, as we have received them, are as follows:

Two anonymous letters were received through the Post-office at Cynthiana, Kentucky, announcing the existence, in that locality, of a secret organization, upon a plan similar to that of old BROWN's at Harper's Ferry, and having the same object in view. The letters and their contents were made public, and immediately created a great excitement throughout Harrison and Bourbon Counties, where it is alleged the organization exists and intended to operate. A public meeting was called at Cynthiana, and was largely attended. Measures were taken to promptly ferret out the members of the organization, and to protect the community against any outbreak that may be attempted among the slaves.

The association is said to consist mostly of negroes, some of the employes of the Covington and Lexington Railroad are leaders in the movement. The anonymous letters declare, that like that of Harper's Ferry, each member of the organization is sworn to secrecy, and it is supposed that arrangements for a general outbreak were pretty well matured. A vigilance committee was organized at the meeting of the citizens, and the utmost precaution is observed throughout the country. Stringent resolutions were passed, and the least movement on the part of the slaves is to be the signal for prompt action. Great consternation and alarm exists throughout the country, and a full supply of fire-arms have been ordered by the citizens, and a thorough preparation is made for any demonstration that may occur. The people of Kentucky begin to think that this matter of insurrection in their midst is becoming serious, and that it behooves them to be on their guard, and they are preparing for it.

This matter will be thoroughly investigated, and the guilty parties, whoever they may be, will be brought to justice. It is a dangerous matter to deal with among slaves, as they are, as a general thing, easily alarmed at approaching danger of being detected, and are prone to expose any evidence that may lead to the arrest of the instigators to save themselves.

It may be that the alarm is without proper foundation, though the citizens there think differently. If such an organization as set forth in the anonymous letters really exists, it must be fully exposed in a few days. We shall await further developments.

FATE OF CAPT. BROWN.

We understand that Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, of New-York, has written to Gov. WISE, of Virginia, to know if the Governor intends to pardon or commute the sentence of old BROWN. The Governor has replied to Mr. Ex-Eayor WOOD that old Ossowatomie BROWN will certainly be hung on the 2d day of December next, when his body will be handed over to the surgeons to be taken from the State, so that the carcass shall not polute the soil of Virginia.—Washington States, Nov. 7.

FALL OF A GRAIN STOREHOUSE.

From the Hartford Post, Nov. 7.

The front half of the large four-story store of SAMUEL ROCKWELL & SON, on the corner of Morgan and Front streets, fell at about seven o'clock on Saturday morning, burying in the ruins thousands of dollars' worth of flour and feed, with which the floors were overloaded. The boy whose duty it was to open the store in the morning had been in the building but a few moments, and was in the act of sweeping the floor in the rear part of the store, when he heard a crashing in front, and immediately made his escape by a side-door on Front-street. No sooner had he got out than about one-half the building, extending to within a few feet of the door by which he had made his escape, was in a heap of ruins. The building was thirty feet front on Morgan-street by ninety-six feet on Front-street, four stories high, built of brick with 12-inch walls to the upper story, which dropped off to eight inches. The floors all rested on 12-inch walls. The buildiug was erected in the Summer of 1857, and first occupied in the Fall of that year. The work upon it was all done by the day—the masonry by H. R. TRYON and the carpentering by the Messrs. YOUNG, Mr. ROCKWELL furnishing the material. In that portion of the building which fell were stored 1,600 barrels flour, 800 bags of meal of 100 pounds each, 60 tons rye and wheat feed, 18 barrels sugar 300 pounds each, 600 bushels oats, 30 barrels liquor, 15 boxes soap, candles, and some other articles in small quantities. The value of these articles was about $13,800. The greater part of the flour was stove, but some of it has been saved. Meal, feed, flour, oats, brick and mortar were piled up in a mass. Men were engaged on Saturday and a part of the night, and all day yesterday, clearing up the débris and saving what they could. The building cost $10,000, one-half of which is in ruins. What that portion of its contents which have been saved from the ruins will sell for it is impossible to form any estimate, but we think it safe to set down the actual loss from $12,000 to $15,000. The statement in the Times that there was a quantity of lime in the building was not true. There was put into the upper stories on Friday, 200 barrels of flour and 20 tons of feed, and more was to have been added on Saturday. At one time last Fall there was considerable more weight in the store than at the time it fell, and no signs of giving way was then manifest. It cannot, of course, be ascertained at present, if ever, where the first giving-way took place, but conjecture leads to the belief that it was in the third or fourth story. To-day will probably suffice to clear up the rubbish, and as soon as possible the damage to the building will be repaired. Next above Mr. ROCKWELL's store, and adjoinlia it on Morgan-street, is a two-story brick building belonging to FREDERICK FISHER, the east end of which is left entirely open by the falling of the side wall of the store. Several bricks fell into the house, and a number of them lodged upon a bed in which a little boy was lying asleep, but fortunately he escaped injury. It is very fortunate and quite remarkable that at that time in the morning, and falling so suddenly, no one should have been injured.

ANOTHER ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—Dr. RAE delivered a lecture on Arctic discoveries recently at Canada West. After explaining some discrepancies which exist between his own and Capt. MCCLINTOCK's accounts, he stated that another expedition would probably set out next Spring under command of HARRISON to make further search for Sir JOHN FRANKLIN's journals and log books.

Mr. Alfred Hamilton, who lately plead guilty to a charge of forgery, before the Court of Sessions held in Ballston, was once the owner of a fine farm in that place, and the possessor of $40,000 in addition. Strong drink was the cause of his ruin and of his sentence to Clinton Prison for two years.

TUESDAY, Nov. 8—P. M.

At the Stock Exchange, this forenoon, the temper of speculation was for lower prices for the Railway Shares. About 4,000 Shares New-York Central were put out for cash and on time, at 79¾ @⅜, being a further concession of ¼@⅜ from the previous sales, and 2,000 Shares Galena, at 72½, cash, and 72¾ also, seller 60 days, the same as the closing rate on Monday afternoon. About the same amount of Reading sold 37⅛@37 ℔ cent., a decline of ⅛@¼ from Monday's business. The demand for Chicago and Rock Island was rather ahead of the offers to sell, and no further decline took place in the price. Toledo and Michigan Guaranteed were ¼@½ ℔ cent. lower, and Illinois Central again fell back to 61½ ℔ cent. Harlem and Hudson were each ½ ℔ cent. weaker; Panama steady, and Pacific Mail rather firm. Between the sessions of the Board, on the Street, the sales of New-York Central were continued at 79¾@⅜, on vague or exaggerated rumors of the damage sustained by the Company by the fire at Buffalo last night. The latest particulars will be found under our telegraphic head. The grain in the building was fully insured, and it seems doubtful whether the Elevator itself was railway property; though serious inconvenience to the road will, no doubt, grow out of its destruction. The immediate pecuniary loss is far less important, and was so considered in the afternoon, when buyers came in for the stock at 79¾@⅜ cash, and 80 ℔ cent. buyer's option, and it closed within these quotations. There was also an improved feeling in the Western shares, with an advance of ⅜@½ ℔ cent. on Galena, Rock Island and Illinois Central. Pacific Mail brought as much as 74 ℔ cent., closing 73½ bid. The annual election takes place to-morrow, when the dividend question will probably be determined. The Coal stocks were steady on Delaware and Hudson for the cash stock, and for Pennsylvania Coal. The Coal business of the two Companies, through the Canal of the first-named, now reaches 1,176,000 tons for this season, against 901,000 last season, and of the increase the Delaware receives at tidewater 214,000 ahead of last year. In State and Railway Bonds, the prices partially sympathized with the Share list, and there were sellers of Missouris at 84½ per cent. Tennessees dropped off ½ ℔ cent., and New-York long date Sixes sold at 110½@½ ℔ cent. on the prospect of the approval of the people of the new loan of $2,500,000 at the general election to-day. Erie third mortgage sold at 66 ℔ cent., and the common bonds were somewhat less firm. Michigan Southern Sinking Funds brought 56 ℔ cent. Illinois Central Bonds fell off to 84½ ℔ cent. The General market in the afternoon left off steady.

Notwithstanding the Bank Statement of this morning exhibits an increased business in Discounts, the supply and terms of the Money Market undergo very little alteration. Some of the Brokers report a partially improved employment, on demand Loans, at 5@6 ℔ cent., but the business in prime paper, particularly in dates within 60 days@4 months, continues free at 6@7 ℔ cent. The Sub-Treasury balance runs pretty steady. The Customs paid in to-day are $93,000; other receipts, $61,000; disbursements, $91,000; balance this afternoon, $4,630,164.

Owing to the competition among some of the drawers of sight Exchange on England and France, and the somewhat easier terms made at 60 days, a good business was done in bills for the Persia's mail to-morrow. The standard drawers made 110 @110½@ 60 days, and 110¾@110½@ sight on London, and f.5.14⅜ net @ 60 days, and f.5.11¼ @ sight on Paris. There was also a fair business in Southern Bank indorsements at 109¼@109⅜, and in Merchant bills at 109¼@109¾ on London. The foregoing terms, particularly the sight rates, are rather below the Specie standard—the extreme rates recently paid for California Gold bars being considered—and the consequence is that only about $250,000 in Specie will go by this packet, as at present entered at the steamer's office.

A letter from London to the Commercial Advertiser says:

"In the course of a week or two, it is expected that the great financial transactions connected with the failure of the three W.'s, (WILDES, WIGGINS & WILSON,) which is only known by tradition to the younger generation of New-York business men, will be finally wound up, after twenty-two years, by the distribution of some small remaining amount of the assets of WILSON & CO. Owing to the large advances made by the Bank of England, that establishment has been the chief administrator of the various properties, and their agent and counsel throughout the whole period has been Mr. R. M. BLATCHFORD, of New-York, of whose indefatigable, honorable and efficient services, the Governors, on all occasions, express a most unqualified sense."

The receipts of the Toledo and Wabash Railroad for October, were:

Passengers	$22,484 23
Freight	48,858 76
Mails and express	3,316 66
Total	$74,659 65

The earnings of the Little Miami and Columbus and Xenia Railroad for the last month were as follows:

October, 1858	$108,690 22
October, 1859	103,030 90
Decrease	$5,659 32

The following is a translated extract from Messrs. WESTON, DORTIC & CO.'s semi-monthly European Circular, prepared for steamer Persia:

There continues to be but little animation in the dealings on our Stock Exchange. During the last fortnight prices of Railroad Bonds have generally improved, whilst the market has been quite irregular for other descriptions of securities. A marked decline in quotations for Illinois Central Railroad shares, and a further advance on Erie Railroad Bonds and Shares, have been the leading features. Yesterday and to-day the market generally has evinced symptoms of weakness, attributable, in a measure, to the unsatisfactory tenor of the political advices from Europe.

There has been no decrease in the supply of money, rates for which remain about the same. The arrangement proposed by the Directors of the Erie Railroad Company has been favorably received, and the agents of the English bondholders have subscribed to it to the extent of about $800,000. We understand that some of the leading bondholders here have likewise assented to the same, while many others are waiting in order to ascertain the views on the subject of the Continental European bondholders. Money is very abundant—call loans 5@6; prime indorsed paper 6@7½ ℔ cent. per annum, according to maturity. Exchange on London is weaker, the principal sales having been at 110@110⅛; on Paris the rates are unchanged, 5.13¾@5.13¼.

The Hatters' Bank of Bethel, Conn., have arranged with the Importers' and Traders' Bank of this City, to redeem the circulating notes of their new issue at par.

The following are the Currency, Land Warrant and Specie quotations for the week, corrected for us by Messrs. THOMPSON BROS.:
